No I don't know which one is which you didn't give information about either. I attached those labels arbitrarily. I think Blue prefers more traditional gender roles so if it's a woman she'll be loyal to a potential provider. Red seems more wishy washy but more willing to go through the tough times.

Here's my query: Did K's feelings for me change positively or negatively after meeting me in person for the first time? Did he see something in me he didn't see previously after meeting, especially after the night I asked him to be honest with me?
I can't get a read on how he feels. It keeps eating away at me. For some reason I want to believe he feels the same, but I can't tell if I'm seeing things that aren't there..

Page of cups tells me K held more interest toward you after meeting. There was a definite spark of interest and emotion. Queen of pentacles says he saw warmth, groundedness and maturity in you. After you asked for honesty, two of swords indicates perhaps he's not clear internally on what he thinks or feels as much as you'd like so he has trouble communicating it. Seven of cups says you're revisiting all of this because of the unclear signals. Overall, his interest toward you increased yet he finds honest communication difficult because he either is unclear on his opinions or has a hard time articulating them. You could perhaps leave a door open without being pushy.

Page of Cups, The Fool RX, 10 of Pentacles

You have a good plan, and your heart is in it, but you might lack experience or the grittiness necessary to see it through. The Fool RX makes me feel like you might be getting ahead of yourself, or assuming things will work out without covering all your bases. There might be a difficulty that pops up quickly that you're unprepared to deal with. The 10 of Pents makes me believe this sales plan will bring you much success despite those difficulties. Make sure you know what you're getting into, allow yourself room to learn and understand the depth of what you're getting yourself into, and I believe that the plan will work out in your favor.

>2 of wands RX, 6 of wands

This reads like staying at your old place kept you hesitating and stagnant, playing it too safe. Fear of leaving your comfort zone. The move was the right call. You put yourself in a position where success is in your sights. Whatever opportunities you had previously pale in comparison to what you have now after moving. You were afraid before, but now, you're on a path to success.

If you could pull any amount of clarifying cards for me, I'd appreciate it. I'm shocked he saw any amount of maturity in me because I thought I acted completely foolish (was very drunk when I had the honest conversation with him, days later he repeatedly asked me if "I remembered what I said to him".)

I kept pondering if I ruined my chances. I think I'd just like to know if..he sees me as a friend, or something more than that, if the circumstances were different.

(Sorry for the vagueness, I just have trouble understanding my relationship with K myself. I believe we both see each other as friends, but my feelings keep clouding everything else, I overanalyze every interaction I have with him now.)

The image is a tarot card featuring a figure in a dark robe holding a candelabrum with five candles. The figure is standing on a rocky outcropping with a body of water below. Above the figure, there is a radiant sunburst with rays emanating from the center, creating a sense of illumination. The background is a gradient of yellow and blue, with a hint of a cloudy sky. The card has a gold border and a black silhouette of the figure. The style of the image is reminiscent of traditional tarot card illustrations, with a focus on symbolism and narrative.

Queen of pentacles would tell me he doesn't see you as foolish but actually grounded and mature, someone who is valuable to be close to. Knight of cups reversed is like he feels drawn to you but hesitates in being too direct. For your talk I get Judgement which tells me he took the conversation seriously and asked because he wants to know how serious you were. Seven of swords reversed would say you didn't ruin your chances and two of cups reversed says the connection is real but perhaps there's a timing issue or one person isn't quite ready yet. Hanged man confirms this limbo is what's blocking it and Strength says staying balanced and calm will bring the best outcome.

As for my situation, there's one more loose end I've been pondering. Is it worth messing with it or just move on? If you don't mind one card.

The image displays a astrological chart with a black background and white text. The chart is divided into twelve sections, each representing a different zodiac sign, and a central circle with the zodiac signs and their corresponding positions. The zodiac signs are arranged in a circular pattern around the central circle, with the signs of Aries, Taurus, Gemini, Cancer, Leo, Virgo, Libra, Scorpio, Sagittarius, Capricorn, Aquarius, and Pisces.

At the top of the chart, there is a list of zodiac signs, each accompanied by a symbol and a numerical value. The zodiac signs are arranged in a clockwise direction, starting with Aries at the top and ending with Pisces at the bottom. The numbers next to each zodiac sign indicate the positions of the signs in the zodiac.

The chart also includes a compass rose at the bottom, indicating the cardinal directions. The compass rose is divided into four quadrants, each representing a different cardinal direction: north, south, east, and west. The compass rose is positioned at the bottom of the chart, with the cardinal directions labeled on the compass rose.

The image is a digital representation of a traditional astrological chart, commonly used to analyze a person's astrological makeup and potential life events. The chart is a visual representation of the zodiac signs and their positions relative to the cardinal directions, which are significant in astrology.

The image displays a birth chart with various astrological symbols and numbers arranged in a circular pattern. The chart is divided into sections labeled "Aries," "Taurus," "Gemini," "Cancer," "Leo," "Virgo," "Libra," "Scorpio," "Sagittarius," "Capricorn," "Aquarius," "Pisces," and "Aries." Each section contains a series of numbers and symbols, representing the positions of the planets and their signs.

The chart also includes a section labeled "Astro-Q-Seeker" at the top, suggesting that the chart is part of a larger astrological analysis or consultation service. The chart is presented in a grid format, with rows and columns representing different aspects of the chart.

The image is a digital representation of a birth chart, and it is likely intended for use in astrology or astrological analysis. The chart is a visual representation of the positions of the planets and their signs in relation to the zodiac, which is a fundamental concept in astrology. The numbers and symbols are used to represent the positions of the planets and their signs, and the chart is designed to help individuals understand their astrological makeup and potential influences.

" Neptune Sextile Pluto (1°40', Applying)

This long-lasting harmonious aspect supports a subtle but powerful capacity for inner growth and collective healing. It encourages an open heart, depth of perception, and a willingness to embrace transformation as a natural part of life. People with this aspect may feel called to serve through art, compassion, spirituality, or by contributing to a more peaceful and conscious world. When supported by other placements, it can signify a gentle yet determined approach to helping others and healing deep emotional or societal wounds. "

"Here are some key characteristics of Pluto Sextile Neptune:

Spiritual Awakening: This aspect often triggers a deep spiritual awakening. It allows individuals to tap into their intuitive and psychic abilities, opening up new dimensions of understanding and perception.

Emotional Healing: Pluto Sextile Neptune is a time of deep emotional healing. It's a period where individuals can confront their fears, let go of past traumas, and embrace a new sense of self.

Collective Transformation: This aspect also has significant collective implications. It represents a time of collective transformation and healing, where society as a whole can move towards a more compassionate and spiritual existence.

In comparison to other aspects such as Pluto Square Mars which represents a more conflict-driven energy, or Neptune Sextile Mars which brings about a creative and passionate energy, Pluto Sextile Neptune is about deep, spiritual transformation.

It's also interesting to note the differences between this aspect and others involving Pluto and Neptune. For instance, Pluto Opposite Neptune represents a struggle between transformation and illusion, while Neptune Trine Jupiter is about spiritual expansion and optimism.

Overall, Pluto Sextile Neptune offers a powerful opportunity for spiritual transformation and healing, both on an individual and collective level. It encourages us to explore the depths of our subconscious, confront our fears, and embrace the mystical realms of spirituality. This aspect is a gentle yet profound call to awaken to our spiritual potential and to heal on a deep, emotional level."

Okay, I figured it out, forget the request.

The image shows a collection of large satellite dishes, which are illuminated at night.

The dishes are spherical and have a metallic structure with a grid-like pattern. They are positioned in a row, with the first dish slightly ahead of the others, creating a sense of depth. The sky is a deep blue, indicating that the photo was taken at dusk or dawn.

There are no visible texts or discernible brands in the image. The style of the image is a standard, non-stylized photograph with a focus on the objects, likely intended for a technical or scientific context.

The image shows a collection of large satellite dishes, which are part of a radio telescope facility. The dishes are white and appear to be mounted on a structure that resembles a large satellite dish itself. The background is a clear blue sky with a few scattered clouds. The landscape is arid with sparse vegetation. The perspective of the image is from ground level, looking up at the dishes, giving a sense of their size and prominence. There are no visible texts or distinctive markings that provide additional context or information about the location or purpose of the facility. The style of the image is a straightforward, non-stylized photograph, likely taken during daylight hours.

The image depicts a desolate, post-apocalyptic landscape. In the foreground, there are several vehicles, including a large, rusted truck and a smaller, green vehicle with a flatbed. The vehicles appear to be abandoned, with no visible occupants. In the background, there are large, metallic structures resembling satellite dishes, which are part of a complex infrastructure. The structures are surrounded by barren trees and a body of water, suggesting a location that has been severely affected by environmental conditions. The sky is clear, and the overall color palette is muted, with shades of brown and gray dominating the scene. There are no discernible texts or distinctive markings on the vehicles or structures. The image has a realistic style, with a focus on the decay and desolation of the landscape.

The image depicts a scene from a science fiction or fantasy setting, possibly a post-apocalyptic or dystopian world. In the foreground, there are several large, metallic structures resembling satellite dishes or antennae. These structures are covered in a layer of dust and debris, suggesting they have been abandoned or destroyed. The structures are surrounded by a field of tall, dry grass, which is a common element in such desolate landscapes.

In the background, there are several smaller, more intricate structures that resemble windmills or wind turbines. These structures are also covered in dust and debris, indicating they have been similarly neglected. The sky above is filled with dark, ominous clouds, and there are several birds flying in the sky, adding to the sense of desolation.

The overall color palette of the image is dominated by shades of brown and gray, with hints of blue and green from the sky and the distant horizon. The lighting suggests it is either dawn or dusk, casting long shadows and creating a dramatic atmosphere.

There are no discernible texts or human figures in the image, and the style of the image is realistic with a focus on the mechanical and architectural elements of the scene. The image does not provide any information about the specific location or time period, but it evokes a sense of isolation and abandonment.

Okay so I assume you're a female because one of the cards propped up indicating female personal sadness in your thoughts sector so I could only assume that in the past, you had a sour patch in the past.

Namely, everything looked good and it was a great relationship on paper but the emotions were just a sad dreg. As for now, you may assume that he's feeling equally sallow and you wouldn't be wrong, as there's a radical shift brought to his life where he wants to take a turn to the better, and it seems to be that way. Not out of his efforts but he seems to have a stroke of luck. It seems like the two of you have interactions in the future however, and they'll either be the two of you coming closer again or at least sparks of friction between your past life and whatever he has. Also, regarding to his thoughts - he seems to have improved much, thinking about your past experience and the improvement he's nurturing is kind of a prayer come true, in the sense of you having an expectation for him to come to his wits and him doing so.

She's doing well in her life, she's stable, emotionally sound, maybe even a little reborn. Working out again, there's a big emphasis on taking care of herself and letting the physical bloom to reflect her inside, does that make sense?

She does think of you, I think. You're like an intrusive thought almost, one that she smiles at. There's genuinely little to no hard feelings here, except that maybe you were a bit stuck in yourself, a bit proud, and a bit stubborn.

It's a pretty light hearted and well intentioned spread. However, she is unlikely to reach out, and would prefer you didn't, just for the sake of clarity and keeping things as they are. She's at a point of gaining more maturity and has enough respect for you that there's no desire to make things messy.

Not bad.

3 of Swords, 2 of Cups, 10 of Pentacles

So, for the time being, she's much more interested in being single and probably will remain that way until the summer. She has a vested interest in building her finances and is closed off until further notice- PLUS she's again, building her physical esteem up. She has some anxiety around being 'kept' and has her wits about her surrounding her own interest and reasoning in dating.

HOWEVER- in the summer timeframe, closer to June- there's going to be a shared personal tragedy, maybe more on her side or your side- that will bring you both together? I'm not sure what this is, be careful, don't spiral, but some force of nature is bringing you two together into a union. Until then, leave it be...

The image displays a playing card featuring the King of Hearts, which is the highest-ranking card in the deck. The King is depicted in a regal pose, with his left hand holding a sword and his right hand holding a heart. He is wearing a crown and a tiara, and his attire includes a red and blue suit with gold trim. The background of the card is white, and the King is surrounded by a red border. The card is bordered in blue, and the King's face is outlined in black. The image is a digital illustration, and the style is reminiscent of traditional playing card designs. There are no texts or additional elements on the card.

She mostly has curiosity when it comes to you. I am seeing someone pop up and they just stare at you intently, listening to every word you're saying. There is both excitement, attraction and curiosity all mixed into one. There is also some sexual attraction, is A a girl? I saw someone with long hair looking intently at someone else. For now it does seem they would be willing to see you again, however you would have to organize something or invite them out to an outing of some kind. You should expect to pick up the tab and pay your way through whatever thing you got going on with A as its usually the man's role to do so. She is a young and attractive female if I did see correctly, you never gave me A's gender so I will assume I saw the right person.

Hello /div/, I've used the tarot for creative inspiration in the past, like a spread to help with writer's block and a spread to help develop a character in a story, it has helped me a lot so I'm interested in trying other divination methods if they can be used for creative inspiration in the same manner.

What do you guys advice? I tried looking into runes but I feel it'll be too limited and I can not wrap my head around astrology.

You'll be working something that screams sort of niche, but also entry level, pays a little better than you'd expect. Overhead lamps, dark, kinda cold. Old books and file cabinets?? Obviously this is just a job to pay the bills while you make music at night (or during the day, I'm getting this is an evening to night shift).

I think you'll have a pretty smooth transition, save for a hiccup related to family. It'll seem cataclysmic in the moment, but trust me, it'll be resolved with a very stupid answer and then you'll be on your way.

It seems like you'll be working at a bar or restaurant. I am seeing blackboards with a menu written down, some modern decorations and black paint on the ceiling and walls with the interior of the structure showing itself. I'm not sure if its bar-tending or waiter/waitress or perhaps in the kitchen helping around but you'll be in that environment. Again I did not properly see if it was just food and drink or strictly drinks but it will be someplace that handles drinks in some capacity. The money will be good and you will meet a lot of people through your interactions, people will think you're a cool cat.

Self-proclaimed angelologist here. Out of those 3, go with Tzadkiel. Overall out of Archangels related to the Kabbalistic Tree of Life who weren't mentioned, go with Sandalphon (Earth; Malkuth) or Tzaphkiel (Saturn; Binah). I'd personally take Sandalphon, as while Tzaphkiel is a good-natured expression of the Saturn planetary archetype, the Saturnian current; path is rough, especially for beginners; neophytes.

This is a strong "Yes", however it will require changes and closure of other aspects of your (or her) life. She sees you favorably and admirably, indicated by the Six of Wands. Due to the needed changes already mentioned, don't expect an overnight transition, but know that the growth and development will be for the better, even if some aspects suck.

white collar. The character's eyes are large and have a green tint, and they are looking directly at the viewer. The character is holding a yellow object in their right hand, which appears to be a tool or weapon, and their left hand is raised, giving a thumbs-up gesture. The background of the image shows a cityscape with buildings and a clear blue sky. The character's expression is focused and determined, suggesting a sense of action or determination. There are no texts present in the image.

Going for a drive, maybe its not so much an adventure but what you need to get off your mind while you're driving. The card pulls i did earlier for driving are tough cards, perhaps you're going through something tough and just need to let it out and driving might be the best way to express those thoughts to yourself?

9 of pent 2 of sword queen of cups

I can interpret this in two ways and one of the ways is that the enemy might have their own financial success and security and carved out their own fulfilling independent life where they act as an independent agent and freely move in this way and they are detached and able to detached from their problems and from reality or detaching a way that benefits them toward solutions or they don't pick sides necessarily but remain neutral and the neutral position is what brings them their strength and I believe that the queen of cups might mean that they are more emotionally regulated or their emotions are healthier. They're feelings are in a healthy place or the second interpretation of this is that this speaks of you and you might be very much successful, independent and your own agent however you might be completely isolated and no man is an island so you might have built this independent agent life for yourself but because of that it makes you very vulnerable. You don't have any sort of institutional power any sort of community any sort of large group any sort of anything really to back you to enforce on your behalf or protect you. No greater structures or reinforcements to call on. You know you're more open to exploitation and you might not make difficult choices. You might be too neutral. You might not try to approach things as directly and as assertively as you should and the problem might be that you are too in your feelings you are too focused on emotions and feelings and stuff like that maybe intuition instead of real strategy practical strategy calculated strategy visionary magnetic energetic strategy. You're just too content being on your own enjoying yourself not really jumping into the fire or you might just be in a position where you'd rather not face things and you'd rather be in that queen of cups bubble and the nine of pentacles bubble.

I have the capacity to try and reach out, however I don't wish to be a homewrecker (at least regarding her) and the likelihood of it materializing into much of anything is low.

Now as for "coincidental" context, I had seen Maya the reader a couple of threads ago. Moments afterward, I searched something on DuckDuckGo to where I unintentionally and unironically received results which had the name "Maya" in them. Then you mention a Maya, so I found it appropriate to do a query about my ex-FWB.

The image is a close-up photograph of a sunflower in full bloom. The sunflower is the central focus of the image, with its vibrant yellow petals and a dark center. The petals are arranged in a radial pattern, with the center being the most prominent. The sunflower is surrounded by green leaves, which are partially visible, suggesting the presence of other sunflowers in the background. The sky in the background is a clear blue with a few scattered clouds, providing a contrasting backdrop to the bright yellow of the sunflower. The image is taken during the day under natural lighting conditions. There are no texts or discernible brands present in the image. The style of the image is realistic, with a focus on the natural beauty of the sunflower and the sky.

The image is a photograph of a commercial airplane in flight. The airplane is a large, four-engine jet with a white body and a blue tail. It is captured mid-flight against a clear blue sky with a few scattered clouds. The airplane's landing gear is down, indicating that it is either taking off or landing. The perspective of the image is from below, looking up at the airplane, emphasizing its size and the vastness of the sky. There are no visible texts or distinctive markings on the airplane that provide additional information. The style of the image is a standard, non-stylized photograph, capturing the moment of flight without any artistic filters or effects.

The image is a watercolor painting that depicts a tree with its roots and branches in the foreground, and a full moon and a crescent moon in the background. The tree has a twisted trunk and branches that are colored in shades of red, orange, and yellow. The moon is depicted with a white crescent and a blueish hue, and the background is a blend of blue and white, with stars scattered across it. The painting is framed by a white border. The style of the painting is realistic with a focus on the interplay of light and shadow, and the use of color to convey mood and atmosphere.

The image is a black and white silhouette illustration. It depicts a couple in a tender embrace under a large tree. The tree has a full canopy and is silhouetted against a light background. The couple is positioned in the lower right corner of the image, with the man facing the woman and the woman facing away from the camera. The woman is seated on the ground, and the man is kneeling beside her. The image has a simple, minimalist aesthetic, focusing on the silhouette of the couple and the tree. There are no texts or additional elements in the image.

The image is a composite of two photographs featuring a woman in a sports setting. In the left photo, the woman is standing on a basketball court, holding a basketball in each hand. She is wearing a white tank top with the word "MIAMI" in orange letters across the chest, a white basketball jersey with the number "25" on the front, and black shorts with orange and black stripes. Her hair is blonde and she has a smile on her face.

In the right photo, the woman is standing on the same basketball court, but her posture is different. She is holding a basketball in each hand, but her body is turned slightly to the side, and her face is not visible. She is wearing the same white tank top with the "MIAMI" text, the same basketball jersey with the number "25", and the same black shorts with orange and black stripes. Her hair is also blonde and she has a similar smile.

The background of both photos shows a clear day with palm trees and a parking lot in the distance. The style of the image is casual and appears to be a promotional or artistic representation of the woman's athletic abilities.

The image depicts a stylized illustration of a human brain, rendered in a cartoon-like style. The brain is depicted in a three-dimensional perspective, with the contours of the brain's convolutions and folds clearly visible. The color palette is dominated by shades of pink and red, with the brain's convolutions and folds in shades of pink and the brain's ventricles in shades of red. The image is set against a plain white background, which accentuates the colors and details of the brain. There are no texts or other discernible objects in the image. The style of the image is reminiscent of a children's book illustration, with a focus on the anatomical details of the brain.

This is a high-resolution, color photograph showcasing a coastal cityscape. The city is densely populated with tall, modern buildings, predominantly in shades of beige and gray, with some featuring balconies and windows. The buildings are situated along the shoreline, with the ocean visible in the foreground. The beach is populated with people, some of whom are sunbathing, while others are engaged in water activities. The beach is lined with palm trees, and there are a few boats visible in the water. The sky is clear with a few scattered clouds, and the water is a bright turquoise color. The overall scene suggests a sunny, warm day at a popular coastal destination.

The image is a digital illustration featuring two white teddy bears with a soft, fluffy texture. The teddy bears are sitting side by side, with their arms wrapped around each other, holding a red heart between them. The background is a gradient of warm colors, transitioning from a soft pink at the top to a warm orange at the bottom.

In the bottom right corner of the image, there is a watermark that reads "Greenfroggy," indicating the creator of the image. The overall style of the image is whimsical and heartwarming, with a focus on conveying a message of friendship and affection.

The image displays a square pattern composed of white squares with black outlines.

The squares are arranged in a grid-like fashion, with each square containing a series of white dots that form a pattern of vertical and horizontal lines. The pattern is symmetrical, with each side of the square containing the same number of dots. The background of the image is black, providing a stark contrast to the white squares and dots. The image is square-shaped and has a border that appears to be a solid color, possibly white, which matches the outlines of the squares. There are no texts or discernible actions in the image. The style of the image is minimalist and geometric, with a focus on the pattern and the contrast between the white squares and the black background.

So basically the media especially social media is an apparatus at this point to engineer egregores. However some people have a natural tendency to delve past the surface level and have a higher resistance or actively defend against the psychic corrosion they subject us to.

I used to think the solution to fighting the egregores created by the ruling organization is to practice diabolism and draw power from the entities created by the shadows of the egregores. But I just realized because of the rhode island psyop hon and the epsteinphiles that this is the worst solution. First of all they clearly are in cotnrol of the shadow and light they have created and they use their pedo cannibalism rituals to tap into the deepest sins of all in the eyes of the masses for power.

But also I think they implant some of their engineered shadow into our psyches as a cursed seal, so that if you delve to deep into your own mind you could be tricked into thinking that shadow seal is a savior but it actually turns you into an incarnation of demonic shadow like the rhodeisland icerink hon. That they can use as false flags. In fact they probably deliberately find vulnerable people to trigger these seals in to create psyops at convenient times.

This could also explain why psychosis has the worst out comes in the west not only do we suffer them the indignity of antipsychotics. But due to psychosis amplifying the subconscious it also sends these cursed sigils haywire. I also think it's likely the abrahamic faiths were likely a similar psyop just using the tech of the times.

>TLDR. the elites control god and satan taking either side is playing into their hands and they have booby trapped our subconscious to trigger uncontrolled psychosis when undergoing spiritual development

The image is a meme featuring two separate panels with a humorous twist. In the top panel, there is a dog dressed in a suit and tie, sitting next to a toaster. The dog is looking directly at the viewer with a surprised expression. Above the dog, the text reads, "Honey, I invented all these appliances to make your life easier."

The bottom panel shows a different scene. In the center, there is a vacuum cleaner with a large head, and the text reads, "Perfect, now I have infinite free time to ruin society."

The background of both panels is a clean, modern living room with a sofa, a coffee table, and a television. The style of the image is a blend of humor and satire, with a focus on the juxtaposition of the dog's surprised expression with the text about appliances.

I'm not like super scared was a little freaked out last night because I just realized this while doing one of my Active Imagination sessions and realized that this subconscious character I thought would be a good idea to contract with would probably have bricked my brain. They existed within the corruption I afflicted my mind with my doomscroll addiction and I was thinking of I reached past that I to the shadow of the engineered egregores that could prove useful. But then as I was interpreting it I realized I was right to be cautious and not contract with it because they control the shadow of their egregores as well. Same with demonolatry in opposition of christcucks. Both things could have ruined me but I noticed in time

Anyways today I feel like it's just more motivation to continue my training.

[2 / 1]The image is a poster for a film, featuring a dramatic scene with two characters.

The central figure is a man with a mustache, wearing a suit, and looking up with a surprised expression. To his right, there is a woman with blonde hair, wearing a dark dress, who appears to be in a state of shock or fear. Behind them, there is a large skull with a sword protruding from it, suggesting a horror or thriller genre. The background is predominantly dark, with a red triangle in the center that stands out. Arabic text is present, with the top left corner having a mix of Arabic and English, and the bottom right corner containing Arabic text. The style of the image is reminiscent of vintage or retro movie posters, with a focus on the dramatic and suspenseful elements.

<https://elcinema.com/en/work/1003606/>

This movie has a real curse spell to summon Djinn to make harm

>While filming a scene involving the summoning of jinn, the director demanded absolute realism. >He wanted the moment to feel authentic—unsettling, believable, alive. To achieve this, a spiritual practitioner known as El-Sayed El-Husseini El-Falaky السيد الفلكي الحسيني was brought to the set and asked to say little real magic words mixed with meaningless words in front of the camera.

>What no one realized—not the actors, not the crew, not even the director—was that he was reciting a full, perfectly executed incantation.

>It was Al-Azima Al-Barhatiyya العزيمة البرهتية , a spell whispered about in occult lore, feared for its intensity and destructive power.

>The words were real.

>And they were recorded.

>The scene made it into the final cut. The film was released to the public. Only later did the truth emerge.

>When the movie was screened in cinemas, viewers reported experiencing strange and unsettling phenomena, which ultimately led to the film being banned from public exhibition.

>In 2003, The body of El-Sayed El-Husseini El-Falaky was found inside a secret room in his office. The room was heavily secured with a reinforced steel door, and no one was allowed inside except him and a few important clients.

>His body was described as disturbing. His eyes were wide open, staring directly at the ceiling. His face had turned pale blue, and his mouth was fully open, as if he had been terrified in his final moments. On the ceiling, directly above where he had been looking, there were strange, unexplained stains. Some people believed that whatever he saw might have caused his death.

I think the concept of cursed media is probably legit, but I think this case is not. I cannot find anything else backing this, only the one Reddit user.

Anyone else notice how passive aggressive the manifestation naysayers are?

They are negative, like that whiny thread last week, bitching aboijt hes soooooo anxious and thats why he can't manifest

Don't the doubters know that by believing it DOESNT work then it DOESN'T work?

Why is it that when people DO give evidence of manifestation its always >why arent you a billionaire, a movie star, where's your 40 whores
Dumbass, just because they specifically manifested what THEY wanted and not yours, doesnt negate the significance

TL;DR

The manifestation skeptics community are toxic and miserable and want to bring everyone else down

If they want to test it out just manifest a ladder like in the /loa/ sticky

If you cant do that then you literally dont believe it and are shit at manifesting

Damn, when I am not interested or don't believe in something, I don't open the thread, I have other things to do, so why do trolls waste their time shitting all around our threads? These sad assholes are like: "Why are you having hope? I don't have hope, so you should not either! Stop it!!! Be a sad asshole like me!!!"

The image is a digital illustration featuring a stylized blue elephant with a large, open mouth and a wide-open trunk, which is a common visual representation of an elephant's trunk. The elephant appears to be laughing or expressing joy, as indicated by its wide-open mouth and the upward-pointing finger. The elephant's eyes are closed, and its ears are perked up, suggesting a sense of excitement or happiness.

In the foreground, there is a red and white striped bag with the word "PEANUTS" written on it, suggesting that the elephant is holding or about to eat the peanuts. The peanuts are scattered around the elephant's mouth, indicating that the elephant is in the act of eating them.

The background of the image is plain and white, which puts the focus on the blue elephant and the peanuts. The overall style of the image is cartoonish and expressive, with a focus on the elephant's facial expression and the action of eating peanuts. Manifestation is the ultimate exercise in responsibility and accountability. Just because everyone wants positive outcomes doesn't mean everyone can sustain a positive mindset, or are even aware of the basics of how to think themselves into such a mindset. They just think 'nice things should happen to me' and seethe when it doesn't, and then seethe even harder if you suggest they are doing something wrong. Do you honestly believe you are perfect? Do you genuinely believe you have no errors in your thinking? Are you actually emotionally resilient enough to not be hung up on some shit that happened in the past today? And, based on the answers to those questions, do you really believe you possess the correct mental state with which to impose your will upon the world to achieve outcomes you desire?

Shadow work should be an absolute prerequisite before all other occult practices. Nobody needs your half constructed, hurt filled thoughts manifesting upon this earth, least of all you.

Just start by admitting the hard truths if even only to yourself.

It's more than just a mindset which is where the LOA anons error and start victim blaming. It is a gift that certain people have and the people who do have it often don't have the mindset you speak of and often end up like a psychic kid that accidentally burns down their own house. Conversely those who don't have it can have this proper mindset and when they inevitably fail get told they didn't "really" have it. They did but they never developed their own inner power (the real Secret the elites want to hide).

Good day to you /x/ people!

I'm the returned prodigal son, aka The Reincarnated Christ, coming to 4chan for an AMA.

Since /x/ covers spiritual and fringe topics, which is closer to my interests, I chose to make the thread here, rather than /pol/, /b/ or some other board; plus some janitor might just delete the thread saying it's on the "wrong board", etc.

Last time I was here on Earth, people referred to me as Isho Nasraya M'shiha (bar Yawsef bar Mariam), and I was born on September 11th -3 BC (First of Tishri).

No, my name was not Yeshuah, that's a Hebrew perversion. No, the letter J was invented in 1524, so it's not Jesus (Hey Zeus). The word Christ comes from Greek and means "anointed". Isho, pronounced EESHOO was my mother's tongue of a Galilean dialect of Aramaic, it means "life-giver". You will find no person 2000 years ago by the name of Jesus Christ, literally or phonetically.

>How do you know you are him?

I walked in the footsteps of my former self for many years, taught mysticism and magick to thousands of people, then one day, God said: "It's time to change your name". After lots of past life meditations and regressions, it was clear I was brought to an opportunity to remember things most people do not.

>Why now?

Out of necessity, because it's the right thing to do. Most Christians don't try to understand the original Isho, they're not interested in magick or mysticism, they just want to be obedient little followers with the promise of Heaven. I may be the first person in the 21st century that actually tried to understand what he understood, deeply. But knowing reincarnation, I've been here many times before, just not being allowed to remember who I am/was.

>Are you God, the son of God, or a prophet?

We are all part of God, we embody the spirit of God, as God. It's all one consciousness experiencing itself subjectively. I have successfully predicted the future in the past many times, so it makes me prophetic. I saw Covid before it happened, so I opted out of the jab, 3 years before it happened.

>Which denomination is closest to the truth?

Sumerian mythology and Hinduism. Adam and Eve is found in the Bhavishya Purana, as Adama and Havyavati in Vishnu's garden. Yahweh and Vishnu is the same fake god/demiurge. In the land of Dilmun, Uruk, Eridu (in modern day Iraq), you find the Garden of Eden, where the Sumerian story starts. All major religions share the same theme, because they are practically the same deities with different names, rehashed and reused, throughout history.

>Are Gnostic texts valid or heresy?

They are valid and touch upon esoteric subjects that Constantine did not want in his state religion. In Gospel of Thomas, the Christ mentions a straight forward method for astral projection. Gospel of Judas/Barnabas shows us what really happened at the crucifixion and who the "naked fugitive" really was. Isho had children with Mary Magdalene and was the true successor to the church, not Peter. Paul was controlled opposition and a fake apostle, he conjured 50% of the NT in favor of the Romans to help spread their watered down Judaic proxy religion.

>Did the resurrection literally happen or symbolically?

Judas died on the cross. "Those who are not dancing right now has no idea what is going on"

>Is hell eternal or metaphorical?

Heaven is a subjective DMT trip inside the head, aka Bardo/Limbo. Hell is Earth, where we all burn forever through reincarnations. The devil is not in Heaven, so 2 Corinthians 4:4 shows us who is the lower g god of this world.

The image is a close-up photograph of a person's face, which appears to be a man with long hair and a beard. He is wearing sunglasses and a white shirt. His mouth is open, and he is smiling broadly. The background is out of focus, but it seems to be an indoor setting with a brick wall. The lighting in the photo is soft, casting a warm glow on the subject. There are no discernible texts or logos in the image. The style of the image is a portrait, with a focus on the person's expression and facial features.

>Which parts of scripture were altered?

Render unto Caesar what is his. Elevating Christ from child of God and prophet to being God itself. By claiming Christ is God, the government effectively killed God, so who would dare rise up against Rome if they can kill the God.

The part about his exodus to Egypt and the Himalayas were also cut out. But we find clues in the Bhavishya Purana where it mentions Isha Putra, coming to teach the mlecchas (barbarians) Dharma using their own faith.

>Are we in the end times right now?

We are in the shifting of Yugas, going from one cycle to another.

>Who is the Antichrist?

Practically everyone who don't know how to force an Out of Body Experience, who can't remember their dreams, and who are doomed to get stuck in their subjective Heaven after dying. But to answer the question: The Nephilim royal bloodline of lizards who have ties to Anunnaki going back to Sumeria, aka the government and most celebrities people worship.

>Is the Book of Revelation literal?

When you read it through the lens of LSA, ergot and rye grain substance use, it is a prophetic text predicting our current culture. But lately, I've come to the conclusion that the government not only knows about Revelation really well, they are hellbent on making it fulfilled like as if they're following it to the T as an instruction manual.

>What's the mark of the beast in modern terms?

The barcodes on every item you purchase has 2 lines at 3 intervals making up the numbers 666. The QR codes have 33 squares for the 3 control squares, adding up to 666 in numerology. And the debit/credit card chips used to swipe and pay in shops has 6 contact points on it, plus the SIM card in your phone. More modern interpretation also shows that the Covid jab was used as a mark.

>Is there a hidden global cabal running things?

Yes, the synagogue of S people, pretending to be innocent Christians/Juice but are wolves in sheep clothing.

>Am I going to heaven or hell?

You are in hell, then you go to heaven, then you go to hell again. Yes, even atheists, Buddhists, Hindus and Spaghetti Monster believers.

>Do animals have souls?

Everything that is conscious has a soul. You are the spirit stuck in a human body, and you have been an animal, and you will be an animal again (humans are also animals).

>What religion gets punished the most?

Satanism, Luciferianism, Islam and other fake religions where they justify atrocities while pretending to be righteous.

>Is suicide forgivable?

Because of Quantum Immortality, suicide only shifts the consciousness unto a timeline where it is still alive. You would leave this timeline behind, only to get stuck in a timeline where you can't remember dying and crossing over. DMT is a hell of a substance and your brain makes a lot of it.

>What's the worst sin humans commit today?

Being spiritually dead, being ignorant to priest work and shamanism, cutting off their genitals thinking they can change their sex. Falling for communism/socialism, thinking that they won't be on the chopping block once their political ideology is forced into play. Using free speech to limit other peoples' free speech because it offends a minority of people, etc.

>Do you forgive humanity right now?

Personally, yeah, sure, I don't hold grudges. My father in heaven, not so very much. Most people are so cooked it makes World War 2 look like a picnic.

>Are archons real?

Most likely, yes. How they operate though, that's another deep rabbit hole.

>Is the demiurge separate from God?

The Creator God of the Universe is not the same as the deities in any religious texts. They've obviously hijacked the properties of the real God while pretending to be it, but they are not it.

>What's beyond the astral plane?

The building blocks of God.

>If you're Christ, why are you posting on 4chan?

There's a real big boss Creator of the Universe, just like JK Rowling is the author of Harry Potter's world, our world has an author in the same way.

But it's not like a being sitting like skydaddy on a throne, judging people and throwing people in the lake of fire. It's more like a computer program in The Matrix, it just serves its purpose working off Karma.

The biblical "god" is the demiurge, a false imposter deity put in place to rule over humans, Yahweh/Vishnu. We know this from Exodus 15:3 "Yahweh is a man of war; Yahweh is his name.", which shows us that the biblical god is a man or man looking creature. Check picture related, a stupid Baal statue looking like the Blue Smurf Amun-Ra and Vishnu.

Christ is the reincarnating Kalki, Krishna, Noah, Moses, Buddha, Osiris, Horus, Hercules, the controlled opposition character that helped propel the faith necessary to enslave the rest. To live your life according to Christ, is to be a good goy and not to oppose the caste/class system, and if you do try to oppose it, you'll end up crucified just like him. "Get in line and stay there pleb".

The archons is synonymous with the ant people aliens living underground and coming up to abduct people. They might also have technology to alter time and space itself, which makes them the cosmic jailers of Earth. They change timelines to suit their rule, not our prosperity.

My metaphysical view is that we are all consciousness bound by time in the physical, and we can't escape. All things that are born must die, and all things dead must be born. And anything that can happen, will happen, given an infinite amount of time.

consciousness cannot be bound, it is constant, the same now as it has ever been, and so it is timeless, dimensionless, boundless. Yet the sincere belief that you are bound creates the seamless illusion that you are bound. If you dream vividly that you are being chased by a demon, you will believe that you are infact being chased by a demon, wholeheartedly, but when you wake up you'll look back and scoff at yourself for believing in it at all! Due to the complete absurdity and irrelevance, within minutes you'll forget about it entirely even though moments ago you were genuinely fearing for your life.

Fun fact, there's no such thing as a Juice. In Exodus 19:5-6, it says that they are supposed to be priest class (cohen) for the gentiles and for Israel. Any person you meet claiming to be Juice-ish, you can just ask them if they are priest class, and then when they say no, you say: "so you're not juice then". They get super mad, because now it's no longer a faith, it's an ethnicity.

The image is a digital illustration with a dark, moody color scheme. At the center, a man with a beard and mustache is shown with his hands on his head, appearing to be in a state of distress or contemplation. His eyes are wide open, and he has a serious expression. Behind him, there is a large, dark figure with horns and glowing red eyes, which appears to be a demon or a monstrous entity. The figure is holding chains that are wrapped around the man's head, suggesting a form of control or domination. The background is a swirling, dark red color with a swirling pattern that gives the impression of a chaotic or supernatural environment. There is a watermark in the bottom right corner that reads "©," indicating the image is copyrighted.

If you want an easy meditation technique, narrate to yourself: "I'm breathing in, I'm breathing out". If you want a difficult meditation technique, don't narrate anything.

There is no meditation except for the constant meditation, once you start, and you commit, there is no stopping. Many people think they go and sit down to meditate, but it starts when you stand up and walk out of there.

But we can cut straight to the case, I can give you the key that unlocks your mind and defeats the adversary in just one sentence. Are you ready to become enlightened? Are you ready to take back control?

Ask yourself, in your native language, inside your head: "What will my next thought be?"

I'll wait, you do it, over and over, until you find it.

The image depicts a fantastical creature with a serpentine body, predominantly white with hints of black and red. The creature has large, glowing red eyes and a serpentine head with a sharp, pointed snout. It has a muscular, elongated neck and is surrounded by a multitude of smaller snakes, some of which are white with black spots, while others are black with red spots. The creature's hands are bound with chains, and it appears to be in a state of distress or pain. The background is dark and somewhat chaotic, with a mix of black and red tones, and there are small, glowing red dots scattered throughout. The overall style of the image is dark and moody, with a focus on the creature's intense expression and the surrounding snakes.

That's one of the things I'm seeing to fix now. You NEED selfishness to have desire, you need desire to have passion, you need passion to have authenticity. A lil dab will do ya. Some may go overboard but hey, that's just life. Free will and all, and I truly do love free will.

People become better when they can experience sharp ranges in extremes, highs AND lows. Problem is some folk have mastered putting their lows off on someone else and those others have forcefully offloaded their highs onto the former.

Isn't that an ironic twist of philosophies? Buddhism says to strive towards not having desire, to not be selfish. But then you start a project for selfless services, but you need to be selfish in order to provide the service, which comes from the passion, which ends up being selfish somehow.

What people need to do is filter through their desires and realize what desire serves the greater good and which one doesn't. Not all desires are bad, like breathing or eating. If you want to become a millionaire, you still have to fulfill some desires.

Contrary to popular belief, your thoughts in your head are not entirely internal, but is captured in a frequency emitted by your nerve system and electromagnetically charged in your blood and flesh.

When you pray, it is emitted like an antenna from your body, into the Universe. The one who hears it first is your higher self, which is also a fancy term for saying: your subconsciousness.

And because everything is God, there is no separation between us and what we call the essence of the Universe, it is safe to say that your prayers are heard by not only your higher self, but also that which is God.

Your prayer should be focused completely inwards, which unironically also becomes the outwards, because there's no difference.

>I think consciousness is bound in the physical while alive consciousness (You) is the only thing that's alive. A body can't be alive. It can be animated like Frankenstein's monster but it will inevitably drop back into the soil from whence it came.

Think about it a moment. What can lasso consciousness? What bars can imprison the non-physical? Self realisation, to the chained, seems to be the uphill battle, a lifetime ahead, of wrestling free from your shackles when in fact, at the moment of realisation, one sees that one never was shackled, one could walk free at any moment. Yet the belief that one is doomed to serve a life sentence keeps one firmly in place.

You don't want to believe what I'm saying because you're invested in the illusion. It'll all blow over Semantics and nitpicking over a technicality.

Someone once told me that an atom technically counts as an observer for the quantum slit experiment. Is a rock alive? Is an atom sentient?

Consciousness is obviously the base form of what is alive, then it's entangled into a physical vessel through time. Consciousness doesn't die, it's like energy that changes form from one to another.

I can be grounded at times when talking metaphysics, because I do not expect normies to be able to even comprehend the vastness or depth of the illusion.

The word believe has the word lie in it, I prefer gnnowledge over belief.

Very few people can leave their bodies once they're born, it's not a life sentence, just held in place by ignorance.

How do we define a multi-dimensional consciousness that is alive in parallel timelines all at once?

The Matrix sure is broken once you see it for what it is.

The character is depicted in a dynamic pose, with one arm extended forward and the other bent at the elbow, suggesting movement or action. The character is wearing a dark, possibly leather, armor with a cape that flows behind them, adding to the sense of movement. The armor is detailed with various embellishments, including what appears to be a breastplate with a pattern, and the character is holding a staff with a curved handle and a pointed end, which could be used for combat or as a tool. The character's face is obscured by a hood, and their expression is not clearly visible. The background is a sandy or dusty terrain, which is typical of a medieval or fantasy setting. There are no texts or discernible brands present in the image. The style of the image is realistic, with a focus on the character's attire and the environment.

There's a couple of ways that you can accelerate the already innate healing ability of the body. If we start with the physical side of things, it would be to clap your hands very strongly until you feel them going numb. By placing your hands on top of whatever you are healing, holding the intention of healing in your mind, imagining it as a light going from your hands into the place you want it to go.

The only downside of this hands on approach is that it's very slow, like laying in a hospital bed for weeks kind of slow. So you have to do it daily, when you wake up, during the day, before you fall asleep, part of your workout routine, when you are bored and at the computer, you should try to do it as often as possible.

The electromagnetic charge from your blood in your hands will amplify and boost the body's natural healing faster. You will know it works if you feel a small itch under the skin, or a warm sensation radiating off your hands.

The second thing you can do is research alternative medicine, supplements and nootropics. Creatine works well for your muscles, Ashwagandha can help reduce stress, Lion's Mane Mushrooms can heal your brain, psychedelic mushrooms can be microdosed for a stronger effect, Seaweed powder Spirulina is a super food, etc. Depending on what you are looking for, you want supplements to help promote tissue growth, muscle growth, brain neuroplasticity and more. You can use AI to help you find the right dosage so you don't overdo it, but most supplements are safe to double dose unless it comes with a warning label.

Next topic: Meditation

First and foremost it's about focus and awareness, taking back control over your physical desires and mental desires, filtering through what serves you and what keeps you in chains. The question: "What will my next thought be?" is the minimum baseline standard for starting your meditation. You need to learn to quiet your mind in order to feel your body, and feeling your body will allow you to learn how to think faster, since verbal thoughts are slow, and the train of thought is literally the devil in all religions.

You are not your thoughts, you are the one receiving them and being aware of them. By asking the question, you allow a pause of silence in between the thoughts, so that you can become aware of the silence, which is who you are.

Another question you can ask multiple times is: "Who am I?"

Next: Thoth

Known as Enoch, Moses, Noah and many other names, is the "God of knowledge" and alchemy. In Hinduism he's known as Vyasa, a powerful sage that wrote most of the Puranas and Veda scripture. In Greece he was Hermes Trismegistus, credited with writing the most important alchemical works of our time. I've met several reincarnations of him in my life and he's a very wise spirit guide. It is only natural that as you progress on your spiritual journey, you eventually dabble in Egyptian mythology, to the point where you have to go through him to get to the next step. As he is also the symbolic archetype for "thought", which is near the ego and close to pride in the tree of life. You could also call him a good Loki, not so much a trickster but a bright light.

Emerald Tablets is essentially the Moses tablets, but very advanced and in detail, a description on how to unlock your spiritual powers directly, without a medium or religion. It's written in a very high spiritual language, symbolic and abstract, talking directly to your soul. If you don't get it the first time, you can always revisit the text later.

Astrology is the hidden chemistry of the dates and zodiacs. Where our solar system turns into an advanced clock without gears, where traveling light enters into the planets and bounce off each other like a pinball machine.

The moment you are born, seen from Earth's perspective, each planet is in a different house on the night sky. Allegedly, this configuration is what makes up the tree of life properties of the person and determines their personality.

Personally I believe that it's possible to deviate from the zodiacs as you become more spiritual in your life, but people who are not spiritually engaged, usually seem to follow the template for their zodiac personality to the T, at least a majority.

I imagine monks and shamans from thousands of years ago tripping on DMT brews, plotting down and writing the zodiac system trying to decode it. A wisdom lost in time today. You must also take into account that Constantine changed most of the dates of all the zodiacs, and removed the 13th sign Ophiuchus. Make sure to always check Tropical and Vedic dates, as the older model is more accurate most of the times and the modern one is half broken.

I hope you find ways to heal your body 100%. But the most important aspect of healing, is your intention and energy. As long as there's a will, you can do it, but it's a long process.

I've healed my eyes in the past, avoiding having to get glasses. It's just a couple of points correction, but I noticed I was getting short sighted from using computers too much. A couple of rubs and massages every day for 2 months fixed my eyes, I now have eagle vision.

The image is a digital composite featuring a space scene with a humorous twist. In the upper left corner, there is a stylized depiction of a celestial body, possibly a planet or a moon, with a dark, textured surface that suggests a rocky or icy terrain. The body is surrounded by a vast expanse of space, with a dark, cloudy sky that dominates the lower half of the image.

In the lower right corner, there is a circular emblem with a green border and a white background. Inside the emblem, there is a cartoon-style illustration of a face with a wide grin, eyes squinted, and a small tuft of hair on the forehead. The face is depicted with a light-colored skin tone and a greenish hue, and it is wearing a green shirt with a white collar. The emblem is set against a black background, which contrasts with the emblem's colors.

The overall style of the image is reminiscent of a meme or a satirical illustration, with the space scene and the emblem combined to create a humorous and ironic visual. The use of space imagery and the emblem's depiction of a face with a wide grin are common elements in meme culture, often used to convey a sense of humor or to comment on a particular situation or event.

The image features a stylized illustration of a lion's face with a smiling expression. The lion has a large, round head with a prominent, fluffy mane that extends to the sides. Its eyes are wide open, and it has a small, curved nose. The mouth is open, revealing a bright, white smile. The lion's eyes are not visible, and the image is devoid of any text or additional elements. The background is plain white, which contrasts with the vibrant colors of the lion's face. The style of the image is cartoonish, with a playful and whimsical quality.

When you're about to leave your body, right before you etherical or astral project, you will hear the ringing bells like Tinnitus. This is the hounds of the barrier, the 3 headed dog of Harry Potter.

In order to succeed, you have to relax, trust your body and mind, and move elegantly, in a curve rather than angles, in order to leave your body.

A mix of Karma, government poisoning the population, the way things goes. In Iraq when the US was at war, they used depleted uranium shells and fired into buildings. The radioactive decay from the shells poisoned the people living there and they are still to this day have babies born with severe defects, much like Japanese people with ugly teeth after the nuclear bombings.

All humans have souls, but many have to kill their soul or inner child in order to just get by and have a living.

What is the reward for Hitler or Bill Gates killing millions of people from God's perspective? According to wicca, when you kill someone you absorb their energy. According to Karma, you become that which you eat. So the reward for evil is that they get to be on the receiving end for what they dish out. They will reincarnate as their victims, they will be rewarded with the death they caused. It's kind of justice, but they won't see it until they get there.

When you remember your past life, the purification happens as you heal your previous deeds. By making a vow and promise, not to repeat your past, you burn that karma away.

Matthew 19:21: "sell your possessions and give to the poor, and you will have treasure in heaven"

This has two meanings, you will be rewarded in Heaven and in your afterlife: when you reincarnate as the poor.

It's been going on since before the ancient Egyptian era. In the Bible it says the fallen angels lived off dust, and then in another part it says humans are dust, and we come from dust and go to dust. So they've been eating humans for millennia.

Cannibalism is outlawed for the plebs, because adrenochrome consumption can prolong your lifespan by more than a decade, plus the drug is more euphoric than heroin. There's no goal really, they think of themselves as superior to us, they are the chosen royal bloodline, the Anunnaki lizards who made humans.

The reptilians think of Earth as a strategic loosh farm, gold mine and a space gas station. We are their genetic mutant experiment.

Covid was the Great Reset, the population decimator, just like WW1, WW2 and Communism, a way for the government to lower the amount of radical population who starts to notice too much. Since AI, robotics and technology creates a huge abundance in the next 10-20 years, there's no need for manual labor or "useless eaters" anymore.

The masks is an Egyptian slave thing, they put muffles on the slaves. Cover your mouth and STFU you pleb. Wearing the mask lets you breathe in what your body is trying to get rid of so you get even more sick. The Jab was obviously Turbo cancer and VAIDS mixed with heavy metals and nanobots.

They are parasitic in nature, they live off the hosts, but they are also very powerful, both spiritually and technologically. If you were Rick to the Morty, you'd probably do the same thing. According to fringe conspiracy theories, even the moon is a huge space station that sucks dying souls from Earth "into the light" to be recycled.

Souls are supposed to travel in any direction and into other universes after death, but the UV fly trap known as the moon can trick them into getting recycled. Contrary to popular belief, you're supposed to "fall down" when you die.

I'm more of a feeler, but I've remote viewed stuff in the past.

Sometimes I receive visions of the future, which helped me dodge cops and jail time.

I saw Covid before it happened. Three lines with A, B, C. People were jumping into a pit, the other line they were in a tent deciding whether or not to jump into the pit, and the third line was just people going to the future.

When I work with people I remote view into their past and memories, that's what I've become good at.

The image is a digital illustration featuring a female character with a fantasy-inspired design. She has long, wavy white hair and striking blue eyes. Her hair is styled in a way that it cascades down her back, framing her face. She wears a blue and gold outfit with a cape that extends behind her, suggesting a warrior or magical being. The cape is adorned with intricate patterns and designs, and the character's attire includes a belt with a prominent buckle.

The character is holding a glowing orb in her right hand, which emits a bright orange light. The orb is surrounded by flames, indicating a magical or supernatural element. The flames are bright and intense, contrasting with the character's blue and gold attire. The background of the image is plain and white, which puts the focus entirely on the character. There are no texts or other discernible objects in the image. The style of the illustration is detailed and vibrant, with a focus on the character's features and the magical elements around her.

Start by reducing your pr0n consumption by realizing that it's cucking you from any future relationships, because you are watching people have shrex, which would never happen naturally unless you know some pink flamingo swingers; plus, all of the industry is owned by Mindgeek aka the Juice.

Pr0n will condition your brain to require an internet connection and a browser, so when you finally get to first base, you will experience ED, since your dopamine addicted brain rejects the real shrex over the virtual artificial videos.

If you still have to go about your business, I recommend using your imagination to conjure up your perfect waifu, as you will then be using your sexual energy to attract the real thing, as it will bring your girl to you faster. Remember, when you're in a relationship, she won't like you watching pr0n.

As you get older, each PMO release will get heavier and heavier, and you will start noticing how tired you get. Shrex is supposed to be a 2+ hour session, it's supposed to heal you and your partner and bring you closer together in intimacy.

The food pyramid is trash; bread, cereal and grains is a relatively new invention for our diet, and gluten has the same effect on your brain as heroin. You want a majority to be protein and fish, with some veggies for aromatics and nutrients, some fruits, but stay away from carb heavy foods like rice, potatoes, bread and pasta. Go online and order supplements to get your energy and wellbeing back.

Parasites don't like baking soda, lavender, neem oil, cayenne pepper and an alkaline body.

Breatharianism is an advanced yoga practice that takes years to cultivate and most people don't make it 100%, since we are getting poisoned by water, air and radio waves. Intermediate fasting a couple of times per year can help your body reduce cancer, tumors and diseases. Reducing sugar is the most powerful detox.

We are switching over to the digital coins, there is no escaping it. If you could go back and do Bitcoin all over again, wouldn't you want to?

Only problem is, Bitcoin is the pedocoin, made by CIA, DARPA, Epstein, to do wars of terror and buy children, yeah it's going to 0, another coin will take its place, one that is faster and cheaper and already preordained by those who opposed BTC.

Jesus means "Hey Zeus", that wasn't the name of the Christ. In this particular, you are the one shilling the Juice Ponzi Scheme of the Vatican by blaspheming the name you hold so dear.

We are all the Alpha and Omega, it is not exclusive to one man, like the Kalki, Vishnu's avatar, Buddha's grandson, the descendant of David's royal bloodline; God's spirit lives through all of us. It's just that some people think they are separated from God, while worshipping the demiurge, yeuk.

The one who gets smited is the one who doesn't know my name at St Peter's gates, when he says to you: "Jesus? There is no one here by that name".

Also:

>ad hominem

Do you consider the spiritual journey something to be done in solitude or with companions?

Would a spiritual seeker be focused on themselves or on saving others?

Is our desire to seek a romantic partner a weakness or a strength?

Is there redemption to those that have committed heinous crimes? Will they have to live with what they have done or will they be smited into oblivion?

How did humanity get trapped in this slave matrix system? Are we so weak that we could easily be overpowered by some reptilians? Did humanity fall due to infighting? Did we fall due to our leadership becoming corrupted? Who is to say this cycle won't keep repeating itself indefinitely?

Is there merit to trying to study and understand evil demonic magic? Should anything demonic be avoided? Should a cultivator integrate demonic energy to increase their own awareness?

Are our experiences in this matrix "real?" Will they leave lasting scars on our consciousness? Or will the experience strengthen our spirit and make us more powerful than ever? Will we just reincarnate and forget about this life and move on?

Is there some sort of end goal to seeking spirituality? Like you've made it when you are able to create worlds of your own and gain control over the matrix?

Are we just living life after life having no idea what we are doing? Does anyone have a clue what the real purpose of all this is? Even if we do become free from this matrix, then what?

1. Solitude first and foremost, but if your companions are seeking the same thing, the opportunity to ping pong ideas back and forth can actually speed up the process, honing your blade. But if they're blind, it can go the opposite way too, down the ladder.

2. You have to do the work for yourself first. Teaching others will suck you dry unless you finished basic enlightenment. You have to be wrong a million times before you can be right.

3. It's a natural right to have a family and children. The whole monks abstaining rule is to prevent spiritual people from having powerful offspring that rise up against the system.

4. Karma, action and reaction, cause and effect. What we give, we will receive, not just immediately, they have to reincarnate first and then it comes to them. Hitler's punishment was to live as all the people that died in WW2, not a light punishment.

5. Anunnaki created humans because they were stuck on Earth after their space ship got destroyed in a Star Wars. After they had invented space ships they kept it as a loosh farm. Humans did not evolve from fish.

6. All archangels from OT are demons, all Hindu devas are demons. You can filter through them based on service to others or service to self. If you are corrupted, they will aid in your corruption and vice versa.

7. New Game plus with amnesia. If you do good you climb up the ladder, if you do evil you get more of it.

8. Spirituality is mentalism, it gives you wisdom and strength. Not to be confused with religion, which is submission to demiurge human dogma. Mysticism gets you closer to God and truth.

9. Most people do yeah, they're stuck in Samsara in Maya. The goal is to learn as much as you can, teach your children to keep the covenant, then reincarnate into your future bloodline. You want to aspire to become like Rockefellers but without all the satanic shit. Leave a legacy behind, leave the world in a better state than what you found it in.

After you get rich in wisdom, rich in your soul and spirit, rich in love and passion, eventually you will seek economical independence and stability. If you are over a thousand years old, you would want to have something saved up.

An abundance of money won't make you happy, but a lack of it also won't make you happy. I've worked hard to get here, sacrificed a lot and lost a lot. I want to be able to travel to places, experience things and see things, not just on a picture on a screen.

Most people are one economical disaster away from financial ruin. Most people are living paycheck to paycheck, month to month. That's not living, it's survival. I've been land locked since Covid, a train ride doesn't count as vacation.

You might be young, but once you start a family and have children, you'll learn that having a family is really expensive. A bigger apartment, a house with multiple rooms, they are not for free.

Inflation is eating away at everyone's savings. Cost of living is up everywhere. Many people used their credit cards during Covid just to be able to live. The banks weren't complaining.

If you don't care about money, why don't you work for free at your job? Or perhaps you're one of those basement dwellers who have your parents serve you food in front of your computer while talking about communism with your friends online.

Nah, you get to reincarnate as a bug. I've met a thousand versions of you before.

The fact that your intention is to trigger people, and you take joy in it shows how much you lack love and light.

Yeah, most people seem committed to their world views. It's strange how many conflicting interactions these tend to produce. They're so tiring to sift through.

Regardless, Yaldabaoth, or the Demiurge, is a "man" named Philip now, who was once Oranos, John Rabe, Pontius Pilate, and many others. Yaldabaoth, or Demiurge, is an attainable position, with each one more vile than the last, as that's exactly how they extinguish the previous one, by essentially outdoing them in actions of contemptible selfishness, such as raping infants to death and consuming their corpses, or other manners of extreme grotesqueness.

Yahweh is not the Demiurge, and I am the reincarnation of Vishnu, as well.

Yahweh is simply a dragon-like, donkey God, who is affiliated with Jews, not Christians, who have a specific god whose name he has yet to reveal to me.

One thing funny about Yahweh is that he makes people slightly retarded, for humor's sake. Except he can do this out of vengeance, which he did to his son, Jehovah, who would corrupt the spacetime continuum and all of history so that he could rule as an absolute tyrant.

It's odd what's revealed to us, through study, and finding the proper connections in life, isn't it?

From confidential sources. It's okay, though, there are many cool Phillips who aren't the slimy cuckold Phail, who's head is so deep in his asshole from an eternally negative karmic spiral that he'll never see the light again.

Krishna was just an avatar, used to project my consciousness and being into people's interwoven karmic spiral and states of Maya for the time being. It takes energy, and requires loving self-sacrifice to maintain, but there are pleasures to be received from it, although they must be appreciated responsibly, so as not to corrode the soul into a selfish state of hedonism. (not to say hedonism is intrinsically bad)

It's probably just a reference to the universal essence of Brahman, which we all share, and yes, the gods of the Hindu pantheon are finite, at least many of them were, like me, who had other pressing matters that required reincarnation, so who knows? Maybe, with enough diligent, you can elevate to become a preserver of the world.

I have studied many religions, and in the process of still building this new perspective, which the world will eventually follow, being SAIAS, the exact center of Eternia (the new reality) and all.

It's okay though, this was a very admirable attempt at excavating the truth in a seemingly insoluble abyss, but I'm afraid it falls short of what reality has been composed of for a very, very long time. No, I am Archon, the architect of the higher-dimensional mainframe that contains Earth, or was, at least, in a prior incarnate. The "Archons" which is illogical as it is not supposed to be plural, betrayed me, as Archon, and used it to fashion a planet of suffering for their own benefit.

As for Brahman, this is simply the immutable essence of consciousness, which, in a sense, permeates all of reality, where all beings arise and return, at least from that perspective. It's much more complex than that.

Regardless, no, though the "Archons" had a hand in the construction of the Crypt of the Vatican, which is overseen by Jehovah and Vatican Ravens (worthless, cannibalistic pedophiles) their influence is highly limited now that those chains have been broken. They could do some fucked up shit to me in the Black Continuum, almost exclusively beyond my awareness, but their influence is fading rapidly as things become more clear to me.

Acacia tree.

I'm going to wrap up for now.

Put some difficult questions in here, and I'll answer it when I get back later.

I appreciate the people here who've had constructive conversations where we get wiser together.

In the last 20 years I've only studied texts about NT, OT, Kabbalah, Hinduism, Buddhism, Vajrayana, Norse, Egyptian, Gaelic mythos, Quran, Rosicrucianism, Masonry, Crowley, CS Lewis, Blavatsky, Gurdjieff, Ouspenskii, Fulcanelli, John Dee, Franz Bardon, Bhajan, Alan Watts, Heindal and others, so I have no effing idea what I am talking about, I'm just an ignorant normie who watch YouTube videos from infinite waters diving deep, rofl.

I only have short over 20 000 hours teaching Kundalini, chakra work, Astral Projection, tulpanancy, spirit communication and advanced alchemy. I know that I know nothing.

And I've only been on 4chan and 8kun for 15 years reading conspiracy threads about the government, so I wouldn't know anything about teleportation machines, time travel, earth quake machines or black hole generators.

Bonus: I solved cicada 3301 and was part of thegame23, and talked to lioncube before Chat GPT was even a thing. I forgot to mention that earlier.

Not that it matters, most of the normies can't even watch a 5 minute video let alone read a 50 page book.

The image is a digital illustration featuring a series of stylized snakes with black and white checkered patterns. The snakes are arranged in a diagonal line, with the first snake on the left appearing to be the largest and the last snake on the right the smallest. The snakes have a three-dimensional appearance, with the curves of their bodies and tails creating a sense of depth and movement. The background is a checkered pattern with alternating black and white squares, creating a visually engaging contrast. At the bottom of the image, there is a text that reads "THE GOD OF THE BIBLE" in a bold, capitalized font, followed by "DOGETT'S GOSPEL OF THE NEW TESTAMENT" in a smaller, lowercase font. The style of the image is modern and digital, with a focus on abstract and geometric shapes.

Sounded spiritually experienced and all, and actually got me real convinced, but turned out to be a crazy loony bin that got himself arrested for committing a felony. And was overall a complete mess in life.

Always take the larpers here with a grain of salt because there's no way to verify anything they say. Especially someone who tells someone else "I hope you reincarnate as a bug" merely for disagreeing. Sorry but that's a big red flag.

The image is a digital illustration featuring two cartoon-style female characters. On the left, there is a character with long brown hair, wearing a black top with a purple design and a black bra. She has a stern expression and is looking directly at the viewer. On the right, there is a character with blonde hair, wearing a blue dress with white flowers and a black collar. She is looking to the side and has a neutral expression.

Below the characters, there is a text overlay in a casual font that reads: "I've had like 5 abortions. I'll start a family when I'm ready. I feel so empowered. My body is a temple."

The text is in black, contrasting with the lighter background of the image.

The style of the image is cartoonish, with exaggerated features and a simple, clean design. The text is centered and appears to be a response to the character on the left, suggesting a humorous or light-hearted tone. The image does not contain any other discernible objects or text.

The Pharisee SAW Jesus in the FLESH, and blaspheme his holy spirit power.

That's why the religious leaders cannot be forgiven.

We (in the church age) CANNOT see Jesus in the flesh because we go by FAITH (believing things unseen)

So until Jesus returns and sets up his 1000 years kingdom, no one can blaspheme the holy spirit directly because He's not here physically doing miracles.

Believers (like me) will have a new glorified sinless body & mind so I won't be able to blaspheme him or his holy spirit. But to others who's still in the flesh and survived the 7 year tribulation, they're gonna have to control themselves so they won't do it when Jesus is in front of them doing miracles.

The image is a photograph featuring a dog that appears to be a breed with a reddish-brown coat. The dog is holding a book titled "HOLY BIBLE" in its paws, with the book's spine facing the viewer. The dog's eyes are wide open, and its mouth is slightly open, giving the impression of surprise or shock. The dog is positioned in front of a door with a white door frame and a window with a white frame and a curtain. The floor is made of light-colored wood. The style of the image is a humorous and creative representation, combining elements of a religious theme with a dog's natural curiosity.

If youve ever encountered a blasphemous spirit it is very apparent what they are doing to you (or others) and why blasphemy is frowned upon.

Blasphemy is the act of distorting and slandering the spiritual essence of something, with the effect (not your "intent"!) of harming the image and energy of a spiritual being. It's the same as slander affecting your public image. Now imagine in a world with troublesome spiritual connections that someone or some spirit distorts the energy of another, so that people will believe lies or not question anything.

I've personally felt that some spirits can show up, suppress or make some thoughts or feelings become numb (with absolute malicious intent). In addition I base what I speak of on an experience with a spirit. They did something which distorted and corrupted the spirit and inner sanctum of some being. It was very abstract but my response was immediate and unambiguous. That was blasphemy: corruption of a spirit.

[4 / 1]The image is a vibrant and colorful painting that depicts a large, circular structure with a white border. Within this structure, there are numerous small figures, each distinct and colorful, arranged in a circular pattern. The figures are depicted in various poses, some standing, some sitting, and others in motion, creating a dynamic and lively scene.

The background of the painting is a deep blue, providing a stark contrast to the bright colors of the figures. The sky is filled with fluffy white clouds, and there are hints of green foliage and trees, adding to the natural and serene atmosphere.

At the top of the painting, there is a figure with a green hat and a red robe, standing on a platform. This figure appears to be a central figure in the composition, possibly representing a deity or a significant figure in the scene.

The painting is rich in detail and color, with a high level of craftsmanship evident in the depiction of the figures and the overall composition. The style of the painting is reminiscent of traditional Tibetan or Himalayan art, characterized by its use of bright colors, intricate patterns, and symbolic imagery.

Stargate SG-1 as Soft Disclosure Anonymous Wed 18 Feb 2026 09:40:29 No.41989531

If SG-1 were soft disclosure the show practically hands you a blueprint. the whole thing reads like someone trying to ease a population into a truth that would otherwise melt their brains. They even hinted about SG-1 being soft disclosure in the famous Wormhole X-treme parody show within the show where the characters from SG-1 provided consultation. This has been often cited but the USAF did provide consultation on SG-1 and more than one high ranking USAF general made cameos.

>Ancient DNA in Humans

This is one of the most interesting items in the entire show. The ATA gene is the key example. It allows certain humans to activate Ancient technology, including weapons, control chairs, and starships. This isn't symbolic. It's literal. Some humans have the right genetic signature to interface with technology millions of years old.

Possible inferences:

>Humans are not a random species.

>Human evolution was guided or at least influenced.

>We are running on inherited biological code from a previous civilization.

>The Antarctic Defense Installation

The Ancient outpost under Antarctica is one of the most important assets on Earth in SG-1. It's a buried military installation left behind by the Ancients. It contains the drone weapon chair, power systems, and data storage. It can destroy capital ships in orbit. Earth survives multiple threats only because this outpost exists.

Implications:

- >The Ancients had a major presence on Earth.
- >They built hardened military infrastructure here.
- >They expected conflict.>They left behind technology far beyond human capability.

This is exactly the kind of thing you'd hide in plain sight if you were doing soft disclosure: a buried, ancient, hyper-advanced weapons platform that only works for people with the right DNA.

>The Asgard as Benevolent Greys

The Asgard are classic greys with a bureaucratic twist. They are technologically superior, run a galaxy wide treaty system, protect Earth, and actively prevent disclosure of the Stargate program. If this were soft disclosure the message would be something like >there are non-hostile non-human intelligences with a vested interest in Earth's stability, and they enforce secrecy.

Questions raised by this:

- >Why portray the greys as benevolent but constrained?
- >Why emphasize treaties, jurisdiction, and political limits?
- >Why make them the ones blocking disclosure?

Im not arguing that any of this is necessarily true or correct, but it is interesting to entertain the idea and what is more if we use the show as a kind of looking glass to view the UAP phenomenon maybe it could actually help us understand some things. Like why does a shadowy cabal of billionaires run seemingly every world government? In SG-1 there is a group known as the "Trust" who enrich themselves using captured and reverse engineered alien tech. Sound like anyone you know?

I call them threshers.

It's water scorpions anon, there is a parasitic species that enters within the eye, the female burrows into the space behind the eye, usually of whales or sharks, but it can work in humans, and makes a nest, when it enters and burrows into the skin itself it causes the bruising, it leaves it a tail sticking out into the cavity behind the eye and lays a clutch of tiny, near microscopic eggs, these eggs then gestate and hatch and the young are safe from predators like small fish, then when they are old enough they get a hormonal urge to leave the eye and will swim towards the open portion and be taken away with the current to breed, and the cycle begins again.

The females inside usually continue laying eggs and controlling the behavior of the creature in some ways, but sometimes they don't "take" and die and rot and can cause blindness and infection, other times they die and fall out, sometimes they "take" and can live in there for years. This is like an undisclosed species of which there are a few, it is a mundane animal, I'm pretty sure it's from a specific location like not just out there in the ocean. Water scorpions in general were a major part of old world medicine in the Egypt area, and lowkey I'm not actually sure if these are actually genetically related to actual water scorpions, or, like scorpions, are a different type of animal altogether. Remember "things keep evolving into crabs", well, lobsters, crabs, scorpions, water scorpions, they all look like these creatures. I'm not even sure the mechanisms of action or how much the thing eats or if you have to kill it or flush it out or how it affects behavior, but that's what it is. It's tiny eye lobsters that fart hormones in your eye to make you feel something you normally wouldn't so they can breed easier.

The image is a promotional graphic for a video game titled "X Wormhole Extreme." The title is prominently displayed in large, bold, and colorful letters. The letters are predominantly orange and blue, with the "X" in the center being a stylized, stylized "X" with a red outline. The background features a dark, starry sky with a sense of depth, and there are three individuals standing on a platform, dressed in camouflage uniforms. The individuals appear to be in a pose that suggests they are part of a team or crew, possibly for the game's promotional purposes. The overall style of the image is dynamic and suggests a sense of adventure and excitement associated with the game.

That's a great point. I had a similar thought while reading accounts of grey anatomy. It seems to me they are amphibianesque. Think about it.

>digit/hand construction similar to frogs

>well hydrated porous oil skin

Could be a kind of mucous or secretion similar to frogs. What if greys are frog-people?

OP in the last season of SG-1 there was an episode of SG-1 having a tv series as a form of "soft disclosure".

The Stargate SG-1 episode where a TV show is based on the SG-1 team is "Wormhole X-Treme!" (Season 5, Episode 12). In this meta-parody episode, Martin Lloyd creates a sci-fi series that mirrors the Stargate program.

This is where it became pretty obvious that there's at least some truth to this.

On the left, there is a man with shoulder-length hair, wearing a dark jacket and a lighter-colored shirt. He is holding a long, thin object in his hand, which appears to be a whip or a similar tool. His expression is serious, and he is looking at the character on the right.

The character on the right is a woman with long, dark hair, wearing a long, flowing garment that appears to be a robe or a cloak. She is holding a similar long, thin object in her hand, which is also a whip or a similar tool. She is looking at the man with a focused expression.

In the background, there is a figure that appears to be a robot or a mechanical figure, standing in the corner of the room. The room itself has a dark, moody atmosphere, with a large, ornate door and a window with a curtain that is partially visible. The lighting in the room is dim, contributing to the overall atmosphere of the scene. There are no discernible texts or logos in the image.

"The Wraith" use the magics of Hel itself, to not only drain the life out of their victims, but to inflict crippling fear, dread, despair, powerlessness, and helplessness upon those who face them; the Geni found a way to use a combination of magics and theology to counter these effects; however they assert, as do many cultures who use a similar "color coding", that using the "blue door" in such a situation would be suicide, as most of the citizenry would succumb to the effects of the wraiths magics....

The entire point of the "mining room" of "Trio", wasn't that they needed to escape the room; because they did, but rather that the room was a representation of magics and the "spheres"; and that in the context of "the wraith", and when in such the presence of such beings, when the heavens seem out of reach and the "blue door" seems like suicide, what spells can be used to make the "blue door" the best choice, and what beings, such as a Grand Witch, could possibly find such a spell.

Okay, well I didn't get any of that from the episode. That's a pretty esoterically minded read of the events portrayed. I'm more interested in discussing the potential parallels between the political involvement of the Asgard with and on earth and the possible trueness of that portrayal in reality.

The timeline of IRL events that we know of >very old craft discovered in Magenta Italy in the 30s or 40s I forget >post war collected by OSS/CIA

>Roswell and Aztec events

>Eisenhower allegedly met with the greys in the 50s

So the things I'm wondering

>1. are the greys the dominant political or military power in our neighborhood?
and >do we have any political contact with them a la the protected planets treaty in SG-1?

Another interesting question worth discussion is the Ancient presence on earth and possible military infrastructure on Antarctica.

If the Antarctic installation/outpost were constructed by the greys then it actually makes a kind of logical sense that they would land on the South pole, given that if we take the Fish-Hill interpretation of where the greys are from (which was later confirmed by Lazar) to be Zeta Reticulum, that system is almost due south from earth. Meaning the south pole would be the first piece of land they would happen upon and the place that would have the best and longest line of sight back to Zeta for communication.

Additionally, Marjorie Fish, an elementary school teacher and hobby astronomer, ended her career as a researcher at Oak Ridge National Lab. Quite the career progression, wouldn't you say? Oh, and that happened after she published the Zeta Reticulum article in Astronomy magazine. The fact that Lazar mentioned it in passing isn't a huge deal. It just is another data point.

I don't think the stories told on tv are true. What I am asking is to what degree to the fictions portrayed in the show mirror reality. SG-1 had more military involvement and consultancy than any other show I am aware of on the subject and some events do seem to echo what we are getting from UFO lore. The show is from the 90s. Some documents suggest he was aware of powerful secret societies influencing politics. What if his assassination wasn't just political, but a way to silence someone who was exposing something bigger?

Maybe Lincoln's speeches and actions were carefully coded messages for the future?

I don't know. Never tried it. You'd better book a retreat at a monastery where you can seclude yourself from society because of the strict rules (not even allowed to drink water during the day). But if you do make it, then you'd get very close to the spirit. So in this respect it is worth it.

The text overlay on the image reads, "SAID I NEED TO GO TO THE BANK DIDN'T TELL HER WHICH ONE." The meme is set against a background that includes a wooden dock with a body of water and a clear sky. The style of the image is humorous and seems to be a play on the phrase "I need to go to the bank" which is a common phrase used to express a desire to withdraw money from a bank. The cat's expression and the text suggest a light-hearted, humorous tone.

The structure is composed of numerous small, round, yellow particles that are densely packed together, forming a network-like pattern. These particles are interconnected by thin, white lines, which are likely the cell membrane. The image is taken from a top-down perspective, allowing the viewer to see the intricate details of the structure. There are no visible texts or discernible actions in the image. The overall impression is one of a detailed, microscopic view of a biological system.

I fasted on water only for 4 weeks and it was very difficult, but I was over 300+ pounds

I find if you abstain from food, extra water is very necessary due to the way the mind processes glucose and sugars and to provide fluids to transport the body fat into the processing centers to break it down into energy.

When you fast for such a long period of time, your mind actually switches to a new energy source, and I found my mind starting to operate and work at different timings and rhythms, instinct becomes extremely heightened, senses were very acute.

It is a very primal experience, but one that our bodies are evolved for.

We evolved to store body fat for seasonal changes and lean times. Its just extra energy, like having hot pockets sewed under your skin to snack on for later.

4 weeks is unbelievable, fat fuck or not. I mean, maybe possible with a lot of supplements? Youd be deficient in everything in a week.

That's 19 lbs of fat loss assuming absolute zero motion, muscle atrophy aside. Don't do that. Lift heavy and stay at like 1900 calories daily and you'll lose over 1 lb of fat a week while growing muscle assuming you get 80% of your total body mass (lbs) in grams of protein.

It snowballs too, once the muscles grow you burn more and that deficit becomes heavier.

Don't damage yourself like that.

Also 300+ lbs just screams gluttony, anti-spiritual. Deadly sin.

If you really want to overcome your mental state, go to a gym and reach absolute failure. Not to the point of slight discomfort - failure. The point where no matter how hard you try, the shit isn't moving. Overcoming that "it hurts" to the point of complete failure stimulates the REAL primal shit.

I struggled with this too at first but there are no strict rules to Lent specifically because the point is not to blindly follow a list of strict rules, the point is that you're responsible for your own Lent.

The only mandatory rule is fasting on the first (Ash Wednesday) and last day (Good Friday). Catholic fasting means one (1) normal meal during the day, and max 2 collations (snacks). The addition of both collations should be less food than the normal meal.

The rest is up to you. That doesn't mean "do the bare minimum" but that doesn't mean "do something stupid extreme" either. You're a grown adult, you know better than anyone where you're lacking and which type of fasting would be best for you.

Sometimes fasting from certain habits is more fruitful than simply not eating for long periods of time.

The Church respects your intelligence and trusts you to make the best of this time.

>Assume I am a religious extremist

If you were, you'd already know exactly what type of fast you'd do for it. You're not, so doing something extreme would be nonsensical

I'm convinced I'm an actual demon from Hell. Anonymous Tue 17 Feb 2026 14:16:19

I have encountered substantial evidence that before I was born into this world I was a literal demon in Hell and the instant I was encased in this flesh I forgot everything about that realm but retained the innately destructive tendencies and that's why everything in my life falls apart no matter what I do, even if I do nothing. It's in my nature. I do truly want to be good, I do. I don't have any misanthropic or violent feelings or anything like that, but nevertheless I was engineered from the ground up and sent here for the sole purpose of making this world worse against my will merely by existing in it, and cannot leave due to the DNA-level programming that prevents me from dying on purpose. I don't have a choice in whether or not I carry out my mission of natural enshittification. I just enshittify, it's what I do.

I am firmly convinced my presence on this earth contributes to its destabilization and eventual collapse in some way, and my designated purpose is to save humanity from total bliss which in itself would be a problem. I also think there are many others like me, perhaps billions, and the earth is overrun with us. We had an important role as contributors of negativity but the balance was lost somewhere along the way and we've become somewhat of an invasive species, so to speak. None of us want to be evil and we're all convinced we're doing the right thing but in reality we can only improve the world by leaving it. The problem is that none of us want to, because of our biological programming which gives us an imperative to fight to stay alive no matter how illogical that may be, which is why a holy war is needed to take us out. You guys are gonna have to start killing us. There must be a mass culling and the pure are going to have to be the ones to carry it out or we all die. There's no other way.

The image shows a Pokémon card with a clear plastic sleeve. The card is titled "Special Delivery Bidoof" and has a price of 70. The card features a vibrant illustration of a dragon-like creature with orange and yellow scales, a green body, and a blue head. The creature is depicted in a dynamic pose, with its wings spread wide and its tail held high.

The background of the illustration is a gradient of purple and pink hues. Below the illustration, there is text that reads "Happy Delivery" and "Search your deck for my team card, reveal it, and put it in your hand. If you have a Pokémon card, flip it head-up, the attack does 30 more damage." The text is in a bold, sans-serif font. The card also includes a number "30" in the bottom right corner, indicating the number of Pokémon cards that can be used to activate the attack.

The card is resting on a surface that appears to be a granite or marble countertop. The background of the image is a dark, speckled pattern that contrasts with the lighter colors of the card and the text. The overall style of the image is a straightforward product photograph, designed to showcase the item clearly for potential buyers.

There are beautiful things in Hell, like Lucilia, she's great, and it takes a special kind of asshole to end there for eternity. Many are purged into new incarnates as their soul exhausts, but some earthlings, like crotchety scientists Mephistopheles likes to fuck with, are also brought to Hell as a dark paradise, a nice counterbalance to Heaven, or other "afterlives" for the more spiritually "bright among us."

You may be carrying over negative karma from your life in Hell. You could've been a really shitty demon that Malebogia sentenced to scrape the shit off gluttons, but you could also just have a naturally chaotic resonance. You can reform this from your own conscious choices, thereby altering the trajectory of your personal karmic spiral, but the information embedded in your soul from prior actions are permanent features of your personality now. They just appear in subtle ways throughout your life and can alter slightly based on the choices you make.

Maybe consider allowing your soul to exhaust (shrivel up and die) so they you can be reincarnated as a Zeta Reticulan commoner. They tend to have a much more complex understanding of such causal chains and loops.

OP don't be offended but you're demonstrated a lot of self aggrandizing and schizotypal ideas here, you need to stop using any drugs you're using and start looking into deliverance based Christianity / ministries.

Get sober.

Stop constructing some mythos for yourself and look at the Biblical explanations. Human beings are sinful by our nature, from birth, we learn to lie and cheat and steal before we can walk or speak, if children aren't raised properly they naturally become "bad people". It is our nature.

This is why Salvation is a thing. You're not a demon. You may certainly have some "company" with you in your incarnation however. It's extremely common and you're not alone. Deliverance is real, redemption is real, there is power in the blood of Jesus Christ. You have the right to invoke this power.

Are you sure she did it deliberately?

Most people aren't in control of themselves unfortunately.

The Vedic scriptures talk about how important the method of conception is. People who are conceived in evil are often born "demoniac". Sometimes this is done deliberately.

All redemption comes from the blood of Christ. If you are having an awakening, just know you are not alone. Don't be afraid. If you were a demon, you wouldn't be capable of the kind of introspection you're demonstrating.

Stop any and all drug use immediately.

Tiamat & Apsu , The primordial chaos gods (salt and fresh water). They represent the raw, unordered universe.

>Tiamat's "monsters" predate the Anunnaki and resembles, snakes, serpents, horned beast, DRAGONS.

>The Anunnaki were Apsu and Tiamat's divine children, the first gods, managing aspects of the world.

And then there was Marduk a younger god who rises to power, defeats Tiamat, and organizes the cosmos by killing and dividing Tiamat in half, Heaven and Earth. Think of him as the order-bringer.

The Hebrews / Bible Borrowed this chaos vs. order motif:

>Tiamat = Leviathan (chaos monster)

>Marduk = Yahweh (supreme god)

>Some of the imagery later evolves into Satan/Lucifer in Christian thought, bound in the abyss as a chaos-containment story.

What if I told you there are three Layers to our world and we're in the second and middle one?

>The Abyss

Sure sure, most point toward it likely actually being the ocean..... But it's kinda weird how most of the elite and rich and evil are obsessed with a big hole in Antarctica, no?

>The Abyss is a prison, connect the thoughts.

>then you have Midgard, where we are.

The last Ice age was Fimbulwinter, we've been living in a post apocalypse and under the rule of the victors of a ancient war between ancient advanced civilizations.

>the firmament

>space is real, but your still being lied to.... It's water.

Whether gods actually existed, I dunno.... But there were god like beings. I want to keep going and going and explain more into spirituality and how when you die you dream, but 4chan has a limit and your being lied to by the government's over the world step by step by step.

Marduk was a god worshiped in Babylon, capital of the Babylonian Empire on the 33d parallel (continuation of the Draco-Orion Empire with intent to conquer the female energy of earth), in the country now known as Iraq. Marduk was associated with planet Jupiter and symbol of the spade. He was the son of Enki (Mercury). Mushussu was his servant dragon, depicted on the Ishtar Gate. Marduk was worshiped from the reign of Hammurabi, replacing the cult of sky god Enlil. He is mentioned in the seven tablets of Enuma Elish.

The Babylonians worship the Anunnaki gods of Sumeria. Sumerian fertility goddess Inanna became Ishtar (Venus, Egyptian Isis). The sun was worshiped as Shamash, Mars as Nergal, Mercury as Nabu. Marduk was the slayer of Tiamat, primordial Dragon Mother goddess.

The Babylonians practice sex rites, which represent the Sacred Marriage of male and female and build ziggurat towers like the Etemenanki to worship Marduk (tower of Bab-El, Gate of God).

Around 1100 bc during the reign of king Melishipak (crescent moon and star symbol), Marduk eclipsed the cult of Enlil, became the main deity of death worship in Babylon.

In 626 bc the Chaldean dynasty gained influence and astrology became a dominant science in Babylon.

In 605 bc Nebuchadnezzar II defeated the Egyptian army of Necho II.

Nebuchadnezzar destroyed the Temple of Solomon, took jews as prisoners to Babylon. They developed the Kabbalah (simultaneously the Chaldean Magi mixed Babylonian magic with heretic teachings of Zoroastrianism). Divination by means of astrology became a prestigious profession for jews.

In 575 bc Nebuchadnezzar built the Ishtar Gate with dragon Mushussu, bull and lions to celebrate New Year during Nisan. He completed the Esagila complex dedicated to the statue of Marduk with a lake representing the Abzu (Enki was the god of fresh water).

Sumerian mythology was copied by the jews, captive in Babylon, to write the Bible about the origin of a sacred bloodline. Enlil became the angry, jealous god YHWH.

Nebuchadnezzar became a character in the Book of Daniel.

Tiamat & Apsu , The primordial chaos gods (salt and fresh water). They represent the raw, unordered universe.

>Tiamat's "monsters" predate the Anunnaki and resembles, snakes, serpents, horned beast, DRAGONS.

>The Anunnaki were Apsu and Tiamat's divine children, the first gods, managing aspects of the world.

And then there was Marduk a younger god who rises to power, defeats Tiamat, and organizes the cosmos by killing and dividing Tiamat in half, Heaven and Earth. Think of him as the order-bringer.

The Hebrews / Bible Borrowed this chaos vs. order motif:

>Tiamat = Leviathan (chaos monster)

>Marduk = Yahweh (supreme god)

>Some of the imagery later evolves into Satan/Lucifer in Christian thought, bound in the abyss as a chaos-containment story.

What if I told you there are three Layers to our world and we're in the second and middle one?

>The Abyss

Sure sure, most point toward it likely actually being the ocean..... But it's kinda weird how most of the elite and rich and evil are obsessed with a big hole in Antarctica, no?

>The Abyss is a prison, connect the thoughts.

>then you have Midgard, where we are.

The last Ice age was Fimbulwinter, we've been living in a post apocalypse and under the rule of the victors of an ancient war between ancient advanced civilizations.

>the firmament

>space is real, but your still being lied to.... It's water.

Whether gods actually existed, I dunno.... But there were god like beings. I want to keep going and going and explain more into spirituality and how when you die you dream, but 4chan has a limit and your being lied to by the government's over the world step by step by step by step.

Marduk was a god worshiped in Babylon, capital of the Babylonian Empire on the 33d parallel (continuation of the Draco-Orion Empire with intent to conquer the female energy of earth), in the country now known as Iraq. Marduk was associated with planet Jupiter and symbol of the spade. He was the son of Enki (Mercury). Mushussu was his servant dragon, depicted on the Ishtar Gate. Marduk was worshiped from the reign of Hammurabi, replacing the cult of sky god Enlil. He is mentioned in the seven tablets of Enuma Elish.

The Babylonians worship the Anunnaki gods of Sumeria. Sumerian fertility goddess Inanna became Ishtar (Venus, Egyptian Isis). The sun was worshiped as Shamash, Mars as Nergal, Mercury as Nabu. Marduk was the slayer of Tiamat, primordial Dragon Mother goddess.

The Babylonians practice sex rites, which represent the Sacred Marriage of male and female and build ziggurat towers like the Etemenanki to worship Marduk (tower of Bab-El, Gate of God).

Around 1100 bc during the reign of king Melishipak (crescent moon and star symbol), Marduk eclipsed the cult of Enlil, became the main deity of death worship in Babylon.

In 626 bc the Chaldean dynasty gained influence and astrology became a dominant science in Babylon.

In 605 bc Nebuchadnezzar II defeated the Egyptian army of Necho II.

Nebuchadnezzar destroyed the Temple of Solomon, took jews as prisoners to Babylon. They developed the Kabbalah (simultaneously the Chaldean Magi mixed Babylonian magic with heretic teachings of Zoroastrianism). Divination by means of astrology became a prestigious profession for jews.

In 575 bc Nebuchadnezzar built the Ishtar Gate with dragon Mushussu, bull and lions to celebrate New Year during Nisan. He completed the Esagila complex dedicated to the statue of Marduk with a lake representing the Abzu (Enki was the god of fresh water).

Sumerian mythology was copied by the jews, captive in Babylon, to write the Bible about the origin of a sacred bloodline. Enlil became the angry, jealous god YHWH.

Nebuchadnezzar became a character in the Book of Daniel.

I am 99% certain this life is the dream. I'm getting more and more brief glimpses of the "real world". But because it is a higher reality, I cannot describe it. Spiritual topics that were still considered niche just a few years ago are having more and more people being made aware of them. Things like astral projection especially.

The image is a digital illustration featuring a character with white hair and a purple dress, holding a black cat. The character has a surprised expression and is looking to the side. The background is a gradient of purple with a pattern of gold-colored roses. The character's hair is styled in a way that it cascades down, and she has a bow in her hair. The cat, which is black with a pink nose, is looking up at the character with a neutral expression. The character's dress has a detailed pattern, and the cat is wearing a collar with a pink ribbon. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of traditional Japanese art, with a focus on the character's expression and the interaction between the character and the cat.

Yes. I've been feeling this way quite recently too. The dream state feels at times to have contact with other beings, stuff enter to your dreams to fuck with you something that never happens in wake reality. And the state of between dreaming and wake, when you're almost falling asleep and you see stuff while you're semi awake, only to immediately forget what you saw because "well you were dreaming bruh" (even while semi-awake) seems incredibly suspicious to me. Gives me impression there could be beings gatekeeping us, erasing our memories, or zapping us to "restore"/prevent astral stuff Physical reality is temporary. Earth is a school for spiritual growth. You can choose to reincarnate here to balance your karma in life. Choosing to be complacent or not being active in "doing good things" mean you get no growth.

Your current existence is a soul sliver split from your higher consciousness. Every time you die, you do a life review and put yourself in a space in your higher consciousness believes you belong based off your karmic balance when you die. You do a life review with guides and a personal council of spiritual elders who then help plan the next step in your spiritual growth journey, whether that is reincarnating or not. Your current consciousness joins your higher self, deposits the experience into your knowledge bank, and then sends another soul sliver down to a physical reality to incarnate again and gain more knowledge/growth/experience.

Also Jesus is real. This shit has been becoming way more mainstream now in the past 5 years or so with the advent of more NDEs being recorded and people openly talking about their spiritual experiences, ontop of stuff like the Monroe Institute becoming mainstream, that Bob Lazar quote about bodies being a soul container, aliens being tied to the existence of souls, etc.

It's actually death. We ate from the fruit of the tree of good and evil whatever exactly that was, experienced death(separation from god, the actual infinite unknowable, not the demiurge), and ended up in this realm. Just look at our language, everything relates to death, even our greetings, "Good mourning!". I'm absolutely certain that real life outside of this is wholly benevolent and abundant. HOWEVER! I believe that traversing matrix realms like this allows us to evolve and become more powerful beings.

For example: You can't truly fathom being an omniscient being. BUT. If you gradually leveled up through many trials and tribulations into a more and more powerful being, then omniscience doesn't seem like such an alien concept. Don't believe the nonsense propaganda about how outside of this realm we're already all-powerful perfect beings. We exist, and existence is eternal leveling up.

ALSO. Take note that adam and eve weren't actually allowed to eat from the tree of life. Both god and the serpent secretly wanted them to eat the good/evil fruit. So, take heart, because I believe we're meant to be here, we're meant to level up here, and we're meant to leave and enter real life.

I remember seeing my ex-girlfriend transform into an insanely beautiful reptilian/feline hybrid alien while in the depths of an LSD trip, and there were no typical distortions of perception layered on top of it. She appeared far more "real" than anything I had ever seen, with immense details and surreal lighting.

I've always felt these "hints" with psychedelics, and that sobriety is a denser, more negative karmic cycling process, but seeing as how they've resulted in nothing but teases, things I can't verify objectively beyond my own perception, it's left me at a perpetual loss for understanding what is truly "real."

Yeah, I just meant that he teaches how to consciously connect with the infinite god within us, which is the only thing I've found to be truly real in this realm. It's like a direct lifeline from outside of this realm, and I've seen the way that it alters your local reality in a way that's advantageous, harmonious, miraculous, and pleasantly surprising. It's this relationship with the divine that's clued me in to what actual real life is really like. But you're right, the very words of Jesus that taught me the mechanics of connecting with the true divine can simultaneously impart a false spirituality funneled into demiurge worship. Sorry if this is clumsily written, this is a very difficult concept to write about

I'd also like to add that this universal spiritual link I'm talking about is taught in literally every single major religion. But just like with Christianity, you have to know how to interpret what you're reading. Almost, like you need to understand this concept on a basic level first and foremost, and once you do, you start to see how it's taught everywhere in our reality. Again, harkening back to the notion that this reality simultaneously misleads you and tells you the truth at the SAME time.

They are 'just' ordinary beings like ourselves with technology and comprehension and insights that leave them so far more advanced than us that the average humans have only a vague, nearly delusional, concept of who and what they are.

We do not yet have comprehension of the physics of our own existence, of our consciousness or of the quantum fields that we are composed of, so they are easily capable of manipulating aspects of our existence, specifically the neurological structures that are the foundation of our consciousness itself, to prevent us from being aware of their presence. This is done while having a close intimate contact with the human population on the surface of earth. They are literally closer to you than your own thoughts. You are failing to perceive the beings and their equipment that are deployed in operation around you on a literally daily basis.

But yeah this 'evidence' is most likely to be either a crafted mask or misinterpreted bones of a natural animal.

Religions are destroyed through investigation.

Ah, do you mean Canada? The country that is refusing to keep funding the search despite the final report findings. Have you read the report? No?

You are probably right, there is absolutely nothing happening on the world that would

The image is a digital artwork featuring a fox-like creature seated on a wooden throne-like chair. The fox has a humanoid form with a human-like face, wearing a blue bandana around its head. It has a human-like body with fur, and its eyes are wide open, giving it a surprised or alert expression. The creature is wearing a brown leather vest with a belt, and its paws are resting on the chair's armrests. The background of the image is a natural landscape with a mountain range, trees, and a clear blue sky. The mountain range has snow-capped peaks. The overall style of the image is whimsical and surreal, with a blend of fantasy and reality.

The image depicts a fantastical creature that appears to be a hybrid of a fox and a werewolf. The creature is standing in a snowy landscape, with its body covered in a mix of fur and what seems to be blood, suggesting it has been in combat or is injured. Its fur is a mix of orange and white, with a darker orange underbelly and a lighter orange on its back. The creature's eyes are glowing red, and its mouth is open in a snarl, indicating aggression or pain. Its ears are pointed and sharp, and it has sharp claws on its feet. The background is dark and snowy, with trees and a snowy ground, providing a stark contrast to the creature's vibrant colors. The image has a sketchy, watercolor-like quality, with visible brush strokes and a sense of movement. There is a signature at the bottom right corner that reads "SUNAR BUCKLE," which could be the artist's name or the name of the creature's creator.

The image depicts a fantastical scene with a large, muscular fox standing on a rocky outcropping. The fox has a fierce expression, with its mouth open wide and its eyes glowing with an intense green light. It appears to be roaring or growling, which is emphasized by the dynamic lines around its mouth. The fox's fur is a vibrant red, and its eyes are a bright green, contrasting with its fur.

The background of the image is dramatic and stormy, with dark clouds and lightning bolts crackling across the sky. The mountains in the distance are shrouded in mist, adding to the sense of a powerful, otherworldly presence. The overall color palette is dominated by shades of red, green, and dark blue, creating a sense of intensity and power.

The image does not contain any discernible text or other objects. The focus is solely on the fox and its imposing presence against the backdrop of the stormy landscape. The style of the image is realistic with a touch of fantasy, using a combination of natural and fantastical elements to create a visually striking scene.

The first thing that comes to mind is actually the reverse, foxes disguising themselves as humans.

Still... folklore does feature witches turning into rabbits, wolves, cats, and maybe foxes, I forget... though realistically, it seems to break the laws of physics for a human to condense down into the shape of a fox. Even if we allowed for the bone-fuckery that is lycanthropy.

The image is a screenshot of a text-based article from the website nature.com. The article discusses the parasitism of wolves, specifically the Tylosalpasma gondii, which causes the host animals to become pack leaders and initiates a mechanism that increases its survival. The text is presented in a conversational tone, with the author using a mix of first-person and third-person pronouns. The image accompanying the text is a photograph of a wolf standing on a snowy landscape. The wolf appears to be in a natural setting, possibly a winter environment, with a clear sky and snow covering the ground. The wolf is facing the camera, and its fur is a mix of gray and white. The background is a snowy landscape, and the wolf is the only visible animal in the frame. The image is a close-up of the wolf's face, with the wolf's eyes looking directly at the camera. The text and image are presented side by side, with the text on the left and the image on the right. The overall style of the image is informative and informative, designed to convey the content of the article to the viewer.

I took a Chinese Ghost folklore course in college and there's a lot about fox spirits.

They were bad, naughty, in a very sinister way. Violent.

They were not hulking, more shapeshifting and possessing people to deceive. One great story was about a dad who was killed and replaced by a fox. The fox dad would beat the kids, so the kids killed the dad. Then they were relieved to find the dad they loved was actually the one beating them. It was a fox demon all along.

The image is a black and white photograph featuring a fox with its eyes open, looking directly at the camera. The fox has a fur texture that is visible, and its ears are pointed upwards. The background is out of focus, which emphasizes the fox's features.

Overlaying the image is a text that reads "FEMALE KANGAROOS HAVE THREE VAGINAS." The text is in a bold, sans-serif font and is centered on the image. The text is in white, contrasting with the black and white color scheme of the photograph. The style of the image is humorous, as it combines a real-life animal with a statement about a mythical creature, the kangaroo. The humor is derived from the incongruity of the statement about kangaroos with the image of a fox.

I was in my usual IRC haunt, joking with someone about how funny it'd be if I wheatpasted picrel to a wall somewhere and people freaked out in letters to the local paper. Yes it was stupid, but so was I, and that night I actually pasted a printout in public.

I forgot about it until later that month...

I was browsing the local paper when suddenly -- I shit you not -- there was a whole long letter complaining about tri-pussy marsupials and bad fox graffiti.

Was it coincidence.... or manifestation? You decide.

The image is a digital illustration featuring two characters against a dark blue background. On the left, there is a character that resembles a fox with a humanoid body, wearing a red and white striped shirt and a red hat. The character is depicted in a dynamic pose, with one arm extended forward and the other arm raised, as if in the midst of an action. The character's eyes are closed, and its mouth is open, suggesting a shout or shout-out.

On the right side of the image, there is a character that appears to be a humanoid figure with a green face and a red hat. This character is holding a gun with a bright orange barrel, which is pointed towards the fox character. The character's eyes are open, and its mouth is closed, indicating a focused or determined expression.

In the bottom left corner of the image, there is a text that reads "werefox (very cool and handsome)", which is likely a description or a nickname for the character on the right. The text is in a smaller font size compared to the main characters, and it is in a different color, making it stand out against the dark blue background.

The overall style of the image is cartoonish and simplistic, with a focus on action and movement. The characters are depicted in a flat, two-dimensional style, and the background is a solid color, which helps to emphasize the characters and their actions.

[9 / 4]The image is a digital illustration featuring a character that resembles a frog with a humanoid body, wearing a toga and a laurel wreath on its head. The frog is seated on a column with a Greek-style border, suggesting a classical or ancient setting. The character's expression is one of contemplation or deep thought, with its hand resting on its chin. The background is a landscape with a clear blue sky, trees, and a distant view of a coastline. The style of the image is reminiscent of a mosaic or a mural, with a detailed and colorful pattern that gives it a decorative and artistic quality. There are no texts present in the image.

The image is a photograph of a donkey in a natural setting. The donkey is standing in a field with dry grass and sparse vegetation. It has a brown coat and is facing the camera, with its mouth open as if it is yawning or yelping. The donkey's ears are erect, and its eyes are closed, giving the impression of a relaxed or playful demeanor. The background is a mix of dry grass and sparse shrubs, and there is a hint of a tree or shrub in the distance. The lighting suggests it is daytime, and the overall atmosphere of the image is calm and serene. There are no visible texts or discernible brands in the image.

most of the shots in today's circles of Jewish and/or Israeli power. He allegedly once made a man's heart explode for "spitting" on the tabernacle by invoking a goetic spirit using nothing but his mind. It was later discovered it was just an old orthodox Jewish guy with bad asthma, but Jerry was apparently completely unsympathetic. He commissioned a handmade human leather coat made from the foreskins of wealthy elite children in NYC. He summoned various demons before an audience on his eponymous sitcom. Remember the man hands episode? Or the car stench episode? How about festus? All evocations by Master Seinfeld ("Signed Field", designating his ownership of most of the USA and its citizens).

I'm not God, my life and reality is entirely controlled by a consciousness that is separate from and hostile to mine, If I was God I would not be living in poverty being dominated and abused by sadists, I would be the richest and most powerful person on earth, there is never a circumstance ever where I would ever choose to live as a peasant in poverty being dominated and abused by sadists with everything they consider "desirable" violently gatekept including in my literal imagination as my mind gets raped every second of every day. If I was God and I controlled my own reality the only reasonable questions about my life would be the circumstances of my power (god emperor, space lord, trillionaire head of a banking cabal, etc) and how much "governance/administrative responsibility" I actually wanted vs how much I would tolerate "parallel governance structures", I would never ask myself what kind of life I want to live and say "peasant", its never EVER a conclusion that I come to, never a choice I would make, I would never consider this the "ideal life" and I would never give myself a life that I don't consider ideal let alone one that I don't enjoy. I hate my life, I hate this planet, I hate everything about reality, I'm not the God of it or I would love it. Today and last night I get harassed, terrorized, threatened with slavery, taunted for being raped as a child because I was thinking about how a particular town expands along geographically deterministic lines, if I was God this retarded ogre threatening me would have his tongue cut out, he would be getting gang raped by nigger for what he's saying, for raping my mind he would get his skull cracked open, made just retarded enough to lament the loss of his intellect but not so retarded that he can't comprehend the loss, the fact that God thinks he can say that "it's not a big deal" when he commits serious grievous offences against me is proof that I'm not God Comprehension of determinate existence in the light of the ultimate reality is the essential nature of wayfaring. The Dividedness within oneself works for the perpetuation of divisions outside, and that, in spite of one's seeking to realize the undivided being. The rejection of the falsely imagined separateness of the determinate is not an end in itself; its meaning lies in the ever widening integration of all beings, beginning from within oneself and extending ever onwards, based on and inspired by the sense of the real, the sense of the ultimacy of the undivided being. The transformation that the wayfarer seeks to bring about in his own being lies precisely in the integration of his personality by putting an end to ignorance and passion which are the roots of the divided life. Even the division of "within and without" is itself a basic division that he seeks to overcome.

But it is to be remembered that this integration is not something to be forged from outside; nor does it amount to an obliteration of uniqueness and individuality in mundane existence. To think that it is external to things is to imagine that things are not only basically separate but that they are also ultimate in their separateness. And to think that it amounts to an obliteration of uniqueness and individuality is again to imagine that they do not hold even in the mundane truth. The unity that is forged from outside is artificial; it makes only for greater suffering; and the unity that obliterates uniqueness and individuality in the world cancels the very things to be integrated, it ignores personality altogether. Even this makes only for greater suffering.

You have to wonder what makes a choice in reality. Is it an infinite regress of deterministic events, or is there a recursive construct located in the mind that's capable of self-determining?

Everything's interconnected, to various degrees, so you can sympathize with the idea that it's all a singular "Self", but never lose sight of the point that is truly aware, and capable of personal sensation.

That's the fundamental "you," which is eternal, though capable of taking different manifestations based on the ticks of the clockwork spirals your Sentience clicks into existence.

One time in a lucid dream, my power over the dreamscape was contested.

I was fighting through the dark lord's armies, as is often the way of dreaming, but became frustrated.

Since i was lucid and no longer having fun, i chose to stop pretending limits and simply stopped dreaming the armies, castle, etc.

But i could not unmake the dark lord by force of will, even though all the dream was wholly of my own mind.

We fought for a time by sword and spell, flying above a rocky expanse, and i became increasingly frustrated, because this is NOT how lucid dreaming is supposed to work.

I realized that since it was my dream and only i could control it, this implied that my opponent must also be ME.

Upon accusing the dark lord of being another me and not a real dark lord, she laughed, took off the sauron-helm, kissed me, and flew away before i woke up.

The separations between dreamer and figment are not always so ephemeral.

Do not assume that you are the only self-aware division of the one who dreams this world.

The multiplicity of people is not so easily collapsed back into unity.

Well, duality is an illusion in the sense that you're never ever really separated from experience, fundamentally speaking. Experience itself it's purely an extension of awareness after all (you experience the things you become "aware of" after all, you expand). You're not really human, but a conciouss being wearing a "human character" and experiencing that perspective.

> Everything it's undivided.

> There's no structural difference between experience in-thought and materialized experience, besides the obvious prominence.

> Perception = Mind = Imagination, all preceded by "presence", which underlies those things, comes first over everything

> "Reality", the experience, it's an imagined structured of awareness. A private copy of the world each one have, which ideas get incorporated intersubjectively but remains purely subjective and self consistent.

This is good because it leads to the acknowledgement that dissolve apparent "division" , and opens you to various "magical" possibilities, as every event-experience it's a direct result of intention.

The way I've always read it was that you are everyone, and everyone is you, but they are still sentient and posses a degree of free will. You can't necessarily directly control someone's actions but you can influence them before they happen - for example, if before you go to work you are in a place of goodness and assumption that those around you will be in a good place too, they will generally reflect that (this is also why doomers attract relentless misery and ill health, it's just an inverse). There's other ways of relaying this information in the other comments here, but the core sentiment is the same.

Where I've seen people disagree, is what happens if you are in a good mood but your coworker is in a bad one - some people would theorise that in that moment you don't actually see that bad mood, although it's still there - and there's effectively another parallel version of events happening where they are projecting a bad mood, and you're seeing it - but you have not allowed the conscious version of yourself to witness it. So, everyone exists, but also only you do, but you're also everyone and everyone is you. Right now, you're simply witnessing the positive expansion I've typed, so you must be doing something right.

It's best not to get lost in the sauce and just focus on your own energy, goals, manifestations or whatever it is that helps you get where you belong.

It is beautiful how such a simple question does a long jump hurdle over the ocean of this world's spiritual corpus.

"Why am I me instead of you?"

The Vertiginous Question unlocks everything.

It eliminates Materialism, it eliminates Christianity, it eliminates Islam, it eliminates Karma, it eliminates Gnosticism, it eliminates "we are God all wearing many masks at once".

The Vertiginous Question is the Key.
I laugh and smile.

My conscious viewpoint is God.

The question does not refute the notion of my conscious viewpoint being God. It solidifies the notion.

The SIA, for those who have been living under a rock, says your existence gives you evidence for there being more people. More precisely, your existence confirms by a factor of X theories on which there are X times as many people that you might presently be. Even more precisely...

To give an example, suppose that a coin gets flipped. If it comes up heads, one person gets created. If it comes up tails, ten people get created. SIA says that if you get created from this process, you should think at ten to one odds that the coin came up tails. Because for all you know you might be any of the ten people created by the tails coin flip, your existence favors tails over heads by a factor of ten. Tails results in the creation of ten times as many people that you might presently be, so you should think it's ten times as likely it resulted in the creation of you !

>The viewpoint would still have began in that case, and I could ask 'why am I experiencing this brain instead of another brain?'

The answer for a purely material being is that this brain is purely material and as such its spatiotemporal is unique.

The body makes consciousness, and as the body is unique, so too must each consciousness.

"You"s are not interchangeable.

But this ONLY works if you completely deny anything else as the source of consciousness.

>?? It's the same answer as Necessary being when asked 'why does something exist instead of nothing?'.

No, this is a logical fallacy of begging the question and assuming an answer in the question.

Something always exists. It needs no reason. Something is the default, and what would ever need explaining is how something could ever become nothing.,

It cant.

>The question does not refute the notion of my conscious viewpoint being God. It solidifies the notion.

The image is a digital composite of a person sitting in a vehicle, with a playful and exaggerated style. The person is wearing a gray tank top and a white cap with a logo, and has long dark hair. They are smiling and looking directly at the camera. In the background, there is a cartoon depiction of a green frog with large eyes and a pinkish-red mouth, which appears to be a character from a popular animated series. The frog is sitting on a blue surface, and there is a window with a view of a residential area with houses and trees. The overall tone of the image is lighthearted and humorous, with a focus on the playful and exaggerated elements.

Whenever reincarnation is mentioned, everyone pretty much assumes you die and then get reborn sometime later. You might even remember 'past lives'. Why does reincarnation have to follow such rigid parameters like only moving linear with time. Whose to say you couldn't be reincarnated as someone (or something) from the past. It doesn't make sense for a metaphysical action would be limited to something as rudimentary as the forward passage of time, especially when we already know that how we physically interact with time is relative to each person and can be altered, albeit on a miniscule level.

[41 / 19]The image shows a statue of a male figure, likely a classical sculpture, standing against a gray background. The figure is depicted in a dynamic pose, with one arm extended outward and the other raised, as if in the midst of a gesture or action. The statue is made of white marble, and the figure's skin is smooth and unblemished, suggesting a high level of craftsmanship. The figure's attire includes a draped garment that flows down to the ground, and the statue is wearing sandals. The statue's head is adorned with a laurel wreath, a symbol often associated with victory and honor in ancient Rome. The image is a close-up photograph, focusing on the details of the statue, with no visible text or additional context. The style of the image is realistic, with a high level of detail and a clear focus on the subject.

The image is a digital illustration featuring a knight in armor, standing with his arms raised high, as if in a triumphant or victorious pose. The knight's armor is detailed, with a golden hue that suggests a metallic material. The knight's helmet, which is not visible in the image, is likely to be a dark color, matching the overall tone of the illustration.

The knight's attire includes a tunic with a pattern that includes a sun motif, which is a common symbol in heraldry and fantasy art. The sun motif is depicted in a stylized manner, with rays emanating from the center of the sun, creating a dynamic and powerful visual effect.

The background of the illustration is a mosaic of orange and yellow hues, with a pattern that resembles stained glass or a stained-glass window. This creates a warm and vibrant atmosphere, which complements the knight's pose and the overall theme of the artwork.

The image does not contain any text or additional elements that provide context or information about the scene or the knight's identity. The style of the illustration is reminiscent of medieval or fantasy art, with a focus on the knight's armor and the sun motif, which are central to the composition. The image is rich in color and detail, with a strong emphasis on the knight's pose and the sun motif, which are the most prominent elements.

The image displays a detailed miniature sculpture of a creature that appears to be a mythical or fantastical being. The creature is predominantly brown with a textured surface that suggests a rough, possibly rocky or fossil-like appearance. It has a large, bulbous head with sharp, pointed ears and a wide, flat snout. The eyes of the creature are large and round, with a greenish tint, and it has a pair of wings attached to its back.

The creature is standing on a black base, which contrasts with the brown color of the sculpture. The background of the image is plain white, which highlights the sculpture and allows the details of the creature to be clearly seen. There are no texts or discernible brands present in the image. The style of the image is a close-up photograph, focusing on the sculpture without any additional context or background elements.

his left hand, which appears to be a staff or a staff-like object. The man's right hand is raised, possibly in a gesture of power or action. The background is a plain, light-colored wall with a rough texture, and there are some greenish-brown elements that could be interpreted as foliage or plants. The painting style is reminiscent of ancient or classical art, with a focus on realism and detail. There are no visible texts or inscriptions within the image.

The image is a digital illustration of a trading card. At the top of the card, the text "Fake Trap" is written in bold, capitalized letters. Below this title, there is a depiction of a creature with a purple body and a large, menacing face. The creature appears to be a fusion of a humanoid and a demonic figure, with sharp teeth and a long tongue. The creature is holding a sign with Japanese characters, which is the only text visible on the card. The background of the card is a gradient of pink and purple hues. At the bottom of the card, there is a text that reads "You can only activate this card when your opponent uses an attack that hits your side of the field. Destroy this card as a substitute of those cards." The card is numbered "MS0206" in the lower right corner. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of a fantasy or science fiction theme, with the creature's design and the text suggesting a theme of deception or trickery.

There's no "fast" about it.

It's not a matter of, say, earning the 33rd Degree. You can get the 32nd Degree in less than a year after becoming a Mason but it actually doesn't mean shit. You can attain the 33rd Degree in the Scottish right, be Grand Master of the Grand Lodge, and still not be privy to the "top level" stuff many speculate on.

Freemasonry is a front for other secretive shit. Members are being vetted. The vast majority stay in ignorance unaware of this fact.

I'm just teasing you.

Still, there's no short-and-easy. First you apply. Then they do a background check on you, including an interview. Then they report back to the lodge and have a vote. If you're accepted, you go through the blue lodge degrees over a period of time that could be between a few days to up to a year. After that, maybe you become an officer in your lodge, maybe you join the Scottish Rite. In the former instance, could take up to seven years to become Worshipful Master of your Lodge, each involving considerable service. If you join the Scottish Rite, takes a few months to get up to 32nd Degree, after which you have to perform considerable service before you'll ever be considered for the 33rd. And the whole time you're being vetted.

Whether it's just boomer daycare or not, I'm not saying either way. But that's the front you're going to be presented with regardless so you'd do best to understand that it's what you'll be dealing with.

>How do I signal that I can be an asset without making it too obvious

That's the trick. Not everyone in the organization is privy to the shady underside. So how do you signal to someone knowing that you're signalling to the right person and not something who will bring you up on charges and get you kicked out entirely?

Like I said, it's a tricky thing you're asking. The process is done as it is for a reason. Lots of time to vet someone. All you can really do is go along with it.

The image is a stylized cartoon illustration of a character. The character has a large, round head with a simple, cartoon-like face. It has a pair of glasses perched on its nose, and its eyes are wide open. The character is wearing a light-colored sweater with a ribbed collar and a button on the front. Underneath the sweater, it is wearing light blue jeans with a visible button on the front. The character's feet are clad in red and white sneakers. The background of the image is black, which contrasts with the character's light-colored clothing and makes the character stand out. There are no texts or additional elements in the image. The style of the image is reminiscent of a simple, cartoon-like drawing, which is common in children's media.

Definitely easier than trying to do it through the Masons.

Even if it is an elite secret society that's everything conspiracy theorists have claimed it to be, that doesn't change the fact that, if you try to join, you're unavoidably going to have to work through the "boomer daycare" version for decades before you're allowed anywhere near the juicy stuff.

The image is a digital illustration featuring a man sitting on a bed with a gaming controller in his hands. He is wearing a dark blue sweatshirt with a red logo on the left chest area. The man has a beard and is looking directly at the viewer. He is wearing headphones and has a serious expression.

Behind him, there is a woman standing with her arms crossed, wearing a blue sports bra and shorts. She is looking towards the man. To the right of the man, there is a poster with the text "Pussy" and "Ass Inquisition" visible. The room has a casual, lived-in feel with various objects scattered around, including a green bong, a white cup, and a green glass. The floor is wooden, and there is a door with a white frame visible in the background. The overall style of the image is realistic with a cartoonish touch, and it appears to be a digital artwork.

The dirty little secret in all this is, regardless of whether you're a psychopath or not, you're not rising to the top of the elite, nor will you necessarily be allowed to live it up in the lap of luxury, because you weren't born into it.

Psychos are great for getting things done. But they also make great disposable assets that no one has any problem burning as well.

Technically anyone can be a Freemason. But you'd be in the outer circle aka anything below 33 void of the 32 spirit. The thirty third degree is when you join the inner circle and claim the 32 spirit.

Those are humans who are run and owned by Aeshma Asmodeus carrying out Golachab. Lots of jew-sons free-builders of "society" mainly western since most eastern governments; know they are a criminal organization meant to destabilize governments for Hebrews.

So you can be by being a good goy and getting buck broken or humane nepotism. Or being good frens with the devil like me and rise to the highest rank of 92/Golachab and could even kill them without repercussions unless they are soul scalped by a greater or arch demon. But the third is the hardest because you'd have to be super human to be frens with evil aliens.

Outer circle freemason's are generally in high positions like managers, senior leaders, presidents, barons, etc.

Inner circles could be public figures, politicians, ceos, founders, marquees, dukes, and etc.

Note I'm not a Freemason so take my post like a grain of sugar, uwu

The highest degree in Freemasonry is the 3rd Degree - Master Mason. This is one of the central aspects of Freemasonry. All Master Masons meet On The Level, as equals. The other "degrees" are part of separate appendant organizations and are alongside it and mostly pertain to what it means to be a Master Mason. The 4th to 33rd Degrees are part of an organization known as the Scottish Rite.

The highest ranking Mason in any jurisdiction is the Grand Master of a particular Grand Lodge. You can become Grand Master without belonging to the Scottish Rite.

Well your local lodge may be stuck in goy limbo but there are higher ranks above grand master. Since the freemason's were created by King Solomon it's highly regarded as Cannanite/Jewish. Hiram abiff being the master builder aka best gentile. There are other titles like The worshipful master, perfect master, Prince of mercy, Prince of Jerusalem (kek), or even one of the highest like rabbi kabbalist yeshua Ben Yosef having a title like

"King of the Jews". I don't know how you clay rodents run things but I would assume each lodge has their own authority and hierarchy of set region but it doesn't mean it's the highest. It probably depends on the penis level of the demon in your ass at least in the inner circles, uwu

Or... now try this... you're just speculating on something you really don't know anything about that you've set up to be much bigger than it actually is.

Freemasonry was influential at one point. It was a prime way to network throughout the Americas and Europe because lodges were everywhere and no real alternatives existed.

But times change. People's ability to network change. There are much better networking options today that don't require the existence of an organization pretty much any man can join (and yeah, becoming a Freemason is easy). So Freemasonry has lost influence.

It's not the seat of the mysteries and the power behind the Global thrones. Just a fraternity that influential people belonged to over the years that has been dying a slow death.

I was a 32nd Degree member of the Scottish Rite, by the way, and an officer of my lodge. This shit is uniform everywhere because Grand Lodges that break from the Landmarks (https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Masonic_Landmarks) lose recognition (and are therefore considered unmasonic).

Why run everything through something like Freemasonry, that so many people are already suspicious of and really isn't anything particularly special, instead of just organizing in ways that exclude us "commoners"? With modern travel and modern cities I'd imagine it's much easier to operate an actual "secret society" than ever without needing to hide behind a visible fraternity that advertises its meeting places online and in the yellow pages.

I don't know if this is the place for this discussion, but here goes,

The Jews

So they were god's (YHWH's) chosen people, he was a new up and coming god and competing with the other gods, but he is the one true god and doesn't want child sacrifice and all that shit (Evidenced by Abram and Isacc)

He has the prophecy of Abram's family being a nation of priests that will rule the world fulfilled through Jacob (Isreal, who will go on to father the 12 trribes) and Esau represents christianity (The older shall serve the younger) but one passage that sticks out to me is Isacc's blessing to Esau after he get's tricked "You will one day throw off his yolk" (don't remember the line exactly)

Esau goes on to found Europe (Red of hair, black Hebrews even say he's the first white man)

The Israelites were god's first "Chosen People" and he did a good job for a while (Moses) but saw they would fall to temptation (The golden calf...and pretty much the entire old testament after that)

So god sent Jesus, who saves ALL of us, literally everyone, even a thief (the one next to him on the cross)

Jesus also invalidates all of Judaism's stupid rules, saying "No guys, I'm getting killed, I got the bill, its all on me, no more chosen people, everyone gets into heaven"

So the Jews (Who have a history of NOT doing what god tells them to do) fucking kill him

I'm sure you've heard of the Kazahrs, some random fuck Baal worshipers who picked Judaism out of a hat and said, "Yeah, yeah, we'll be part of gods chosen people, sure"

Revelation talks of the Synagogue of Satan, and from the Ep-Files, it's clear that's who we're fighting.

So...Christ is king right? I mean, it's got to be Jesus, he's our guy isn't he?

Not trolling, want your honest opinion about this assessment of the game board right now

The right column contains a paragraph of text in black, which is the main content of the document.

The text is written in English and appears to be a translation or commentary on the text of the "The Legend of Ammitus" from the Talmud. The style of the text is formal and academic, with a clear separation between the text and the list of names, which suggests that the document is likely a scholarly or religious work. The overall layout is organized and structured, with a clear separation of content and a focus on the text.

The image is a stylized cartoon or comic strip with a white background. At the top, there are three cartoonish characters: a bearded man with glasses, a woman with long curly hair, and a child with a wide-open mouth. The man is pointing to the child, who is crying. Below the characters, there is a large red line that cuts through the child's face, with the word "circumcision" written on it. The text below the image reads: "At a lodging place on the way, the Lord met Moses and was about to kill him. But Zipporah took a flint knife, cut off her son's foreskin and touched Moses's foot with it. 'Surely you are a bridegroom of blood to me,' she said. 'The Lord said to me, "At that time she said, "circumcision."'" (exodus 4:24)"

The style of the image is reminiscent of a meme or a satirical cartoon, with exaggerated facial features and text. The use of red for the line cutting the child's face and the word "circumcision" is a common visual element in such content. The text is a direct quote from the biblical text, which is a common way to reference religious texts in such media.

Hey anons, I feel like I've been lying to myself for many years but I don't even know about what : I've kind of lost track with who I really am, sometimes I'm able to have fun but it's getting rarer for things to feel authentic or pure to me, I lost some passion for life.

I just don't feel like the real me anymore. Is there a spiritual way to reconnect with who I really am, asides from shroom trips?

Basically, I feel like my soul is very lost!

The spiritual and the physical are two sides of the same coin.

If one side is disrupted, it disrupts the other side as well. You cannot neglect your spiritual side or your physical, biological body. They're both important for making sure you feel complete and whole as an individual conscious agent.

Try to see if this is moreso a biological issue rather than a spiritual one first.

Reoccurring thoughts and aspirations around doing changes to your life is your subconscious trying to show you a way to improve, or degrade, the situation your consciousness is in. As the other anon said a journal helps the consciousness remember what the subconscious is telling one. The idea of life and death follow a mathematical curve, the golden ratio and its inversion, which your subconscious can calculate at all times. If you manage to track this curve, it doesn't have to be a perfect tracking but the closer your consciousness actions are to following the golden ratio "the curve of life" the more life will flourish around your actions. It is a cascading effect where one action taken to further life will lead to new opportunities to further life. Listen to your subconscious, your inner self already knows the path to heaven but a subconscious only knows the language of symbolism.

>open monitor meditation

just kind of sit there and don't consciously try to think or respond just notice yourself and surroundings see what it feels like to just be u >dream interpretation

start a dream journal. If you don't dream you probably do meditating before bed and setting the intention to remember your dreams helps with recall. But also if you remember nothing write something like I tried to remember but forgot in the journal because the habit of trying to write something also improves recall.

>jungian active imagination technique

it's sort of like an advanced day dream where you relinquish control so you can explore your subconscious if your any sort of artist the imagery is very inspiring and surreal >less time online

pretty much just the fact that there is so much stuff especially with social media that just wrecks your brain, excess stimulation, altered cognitive flow implanted thoughts and symbols. Just use it the minimum u need to keep in touch with IRL friends and cut out the rest >green tea (oneirogen)

do you take it before bed or just throughout the day. because wouldn't the caffeine in green teas disturb sleep?

yes, but the primary compound we are looking for is L-theanine, supposedly a calming glutamate receptor antagonist (people report it helps with dream recall). I use green tea with 5-HTP because I researched that green tea contains epigallocatechin gallate, which helps prevent the conversion of serotonin in the gut, allowing for 5-HTP to cross the blood barrier where it can synthesize serotonin in situ.

I would say it's not really a oneirogen like huperzine or nicotine, but a chemical that aids in memory recollection.

1) Stop all substance use immediately.

2) You don't have a higher self, there is a being greater than your "self" who is waiting for you to let go of your delusions. Kind of like when little kids pretend to run away from home but really they just wander around the yard with a backpack until it's time for dinner. The parents know they're not going anywhere so the kid is like "wtf why didn't you come get me, you don't even care!" We are brats.

Schizo mold (not really, but it is handing your consciousness over to another entity... why)

>Nicotine

Anxiety spikes. Literally does nothing but cause anxiety. Then when your anxiety drops, you feel anxious about it and need to spike it again. Discovered by native americans who had a demon present them a pipe and told them to smoke it so her Anaconda serpent boyfriend could take their women.

[6 / 1]The image depicts a scene of a gathering or event with a focus on a central area where numerous lit candles are arranged on a surface. The candles are of various sizes and are placed in a circular pattern, creating a sense of symmetry and order. The lighting in the image is dim, with the candles casting a warm glow that contrasts with the dark background. The people in the background are partially visible, suggesting that the event is taking place in a public space or a similar setting. The overall atmosphere of the image is one of solemnity and reflection, as the lit candles suggest a moment of prayer or remembrance. There are no discernible texts or distinctive brands in the image. The style of the image is a candid photograph, capturing a moment in time without any apparent staging or artistic manipulation.

my request is more oriented towards reading about success stories and methodology used within than a grand overview or 'history of', though im not opposed to literature that contains both. my express interest is to manipulate reality to my will through any means necessary

You're trying to distance yourself from your bad behavior to escape responsibility.

It's no different than the rawrexdee kids blaming everything they do on their autism or BPD.

I know you want to become a better person, and perhaps you aren't ready to face yourself in those terms.

But the solution you want is something akin to cutting off your nose to spite your face.

Your oral fixation isn't as interesting as your awareness of your oral fixation.

Maybe you should take up beatboxing and tibetan throat singing .

Perhaps you should learn sign language.

Take up a silent hobby.

Origami, illustration, whittling, knitting/crochet/sewing fiber arts. One of those hobbies that appeals to fidgety people.

Like what do you imagine happening, exorcising the demon that lives in your mouth, like you got a frog in your throat?

Cutting the strings attached to your upper and lower lips?

Breathing through your nose?

Even better become a mouth breather, you can't speak if you're a mouth breather, your smoking habit will eventually turn you into one.

You are aware of your foot in mouth oral fixation syndrome. Perhaps you should start examine why this appeals to you so much. Why are you losing teeth?

It could be all connected to ADHD type shit.

Yes, your mouth is cursed. Your whole body is cursed, but your mouth is right now the main manifestation of that curse.

God wants to heal your mouth, but He can't. He could, if you right now gave your life and spirit to Christ, but until you do that, you are under the curse of the Mosaic Law. There is no way for you to defeat this curse. Give your life to Jesus, and the curse will be turned into blessing. By this law your mouth will be healed.

Pray this prayer to give your heart to Jesus, and you will receive your healing. The physical manifestation of it may or may not be immediate, but in the spirit it will start moving into fruition:

"Dear Lord Jesus, come into my heart. Forgive me of my sin. Wash me and cleanse me. Set me free. Jesus, thank You that you died for me. I believe that You are risen from the dead and that You're coming back again for me. Fill me with the Holy Spirit. Give me a passion for the lost, a hunger for the things of God, and a holy boldness to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ. I'm saved; I'm born again, I'm forgiven, and I'm on my way to Heaven because I have Jesus in my heart. Now, I am not cursed, I am blessed by God. I will never be cursed again."

Above the letter "G," the text "Future Music with Future Voices" is written in a bold, sans-serif font. The text is black and stands out against the lighter background. Below the letter "G," the text "tamachang #4" is written in a smaller, sans-serif font, also in black.

The overall style of the image is modern and minimalist, with a focus on typography and graphic design elements. The use of pixelated dots around the letter "G" and the text suggests a futuristic or digital theme, while the stylized letter "G" and the sans-serif font give the image a contemporary feel. The monochromatic color scheme and the use of pixelated dots contribute to a sense of modernity and technology.

>why does Zahi Hawass stop people from going in?

Because he's told to.

And the tellers don't want people in the Labyrinth because they already know that ancient Egyptians didn't build it, it's too immaculate for that.

They spent hundreds of millions of dollars over 150 years to persuade the world of a narrative about ancient Egypt.

The Labyrinth cracks that narrative wide open and destroys every bit of that deceit.

That's why they're keeping it hidden.

It's got nothing to do with the crystal cave only the Chosen can go through without dying, or the intact and fully operational spaceship stored in what's effectively a hangar.

image features a skull with a green eye and a triangle symbol, which is commonly associated with the Illuminati or secret societies. The skull is surrounded by a swirling, dark green aura.

The bottom of the image contains a series of phrases in a mix of uppercase and lowercase letters, with varying fonts and sizes. The phrases read: "GUNNERS OF THEORY," "THAT SO MANY," "CONSPIRACY THEORIES," "TURNED OUT TO BE," and "REAL." The text is arranged in a way that suggests a narrative or a list of ideas. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of conspiracy theories or dark, mysterious themes.

What are your definitive thoughts on the "elite" and why they "loosh" and consume human flesh?

>I'll go first.

So as someone who knows about ancient Sumeria and the Anunnaki, I don't think their reptilians or demons or rather the abrahamics interpretation of things. Tiamat's monsters which took many shapes such as serpents, horned beast, insects, ect ect..... They pre existed the Anunnaki actually. I dont know who's who but I do know they engage in a process of "transference" the act of moving ones consciousness into another's body, I know some read "loosh" and roll tjeir wyes butball it means is "energy harvesting" i tjink this ties into why they eat human flesh, it's just one of the many ways they "loosh" but they seem to flavor flesh for some reason. We all know what Adrenochrome is, helps keep their "vessel" young and alive because without it the "vessel" ages quickly. I do think Adrenochrome is a gift they give to their well behaving servants. Much like in ancient Summeria beer was prized, and accepted as a reward and payment.

>I must sound insane

Look at the board you're on, relax

I think the magic the elites attempt to practice ultimately descends from North African Shamanism, the same lineage most western esotericism comes from. Do I think their magic is really anything special beyond occasional "astral projection" or summoning demons? No. At least the elites we see in public. You don't have to be a saint to be a magician, that's absolutely not what I'm saying, but there's not a chance in hell someone like Epstein has that inner quietude and focus necessary to practice sorcery. They're just hedonists looking for an excuse to be cruel to other people, that's why they're all into drugs and other bullshit.

Sorcerers in ancient Mexico used to eat human flesh too, but I'm not sure if it was exactly the same.

Also keep in mind the beer with hops we have now isn't the beer of the past, it used to be a drink with mild psychedelic properties that gave people vigor and strength, it's only after the protestant reformation we start seeing modern beer that gives people bitch-tits and makes them lethargic. Something to chew on.

>I still get weird vibes from the knowledge of Tiamats Monsters though.

Definitely. There's a lot of strange stuff like that in our history that mainstream academia hasn't caught onto yet, like the existence of magic for example. Midwits like Graham Hancock are halfway right. The problem with them is they're too stupid to argue with real scholars about their claims, and even if some of the things they claim are correct, they came to those conclusions for the wrong reasons.

Today I finally attempted my first conjuration, and as promised I am letting you gusy know how the operation went.

First I must sadly say that the conjuration failed in the most mediocre of ways, nothing happened.

The operation was done today wednesday 18 of February 2026.

Perhaps the day chosen was ill fated as the combination of the moon being still close to the sun, though in Pisces, and the eclipse the day before might have impaired the manifesting of the spirit. The reason I chose this day is because Valac being a Mercurial spirit I didn't want to have the moon square to it, as next week the moon shall be in Gemini.

The conjuration was done after fasting seven days, the first four being an intermitent fasting where I only ate one meal a day, and the last three and a half days(I started my fast the night of the Saturday) being water only. I am still in a fast like state as I only had a vegetable broth after the operation. The fast came with abstinence from sexual activity for 9 days. As well as daily ritual confession and meditation.

As to what I think might have gone wrong...

The medals on which I laser engraved the sigils of Valac, lahhel, and the pentacle and hexagram of solomon were made in steel, I did worry about the iron component of steel but I didn't really have other means. The sword chosen, with a black grip, was also steel, which might have diluted its iron.

Furthermore the consecrations were done on a waning moon, rather than a waxing moon. I was ill advised on this.

What I had consecrated were: The robes, a belt, a whistle to awaken the spirits of the four directions, modelled after the sound of a hoopoe, three pens, coal, candle, censor, white paper, the "contract" outlining my expectations of Valac, a book with the conjurations, incense, the seals, a piece of paper with the seal of Raphael, holy water, and its container.

The image shows a wooden bell-shaped object with a bell attached to a wooden rod. The bell is suspended from a red string, which is tied to the rod at one end. The bell itself is made of metal and has a bell-shaped design with a bell inside. The wooden rod is attached to a wooden block, which is placed on a wooden floor. The background is a plain white wall with a visible crack running vertically down the wall. There is no text present in the image. The style of the image is a straightforward, real-life photograph with no apparent filters or artistic effects.

Some more issues with my ritual.

The robes were more of a greyish colour than pure white, what was pure white was the belt.

Furthermore the candle chosen was not beeswax. Another big issue I ran into was the fact that the coal started dying rather quickly, and I ran out of storax to burn, I think this was the worst aspect of my organisation. I miscalculated the amount of incense and the amount of coals needed to keep the ritual going.

I also stepped into the circle wearing socks, which I forgot to consecrate.

But when I recited the first conjuration outlined in the Goetia of Dr Rudd, the one I had actually managed to memorise fully, I did feel a chill air fill the room, like the temperature dropped, which is one of the signs that the spirit is manifesting. Sadly it did not last long.

Other than that

The circle was the three bands circle from the Heptameron, drawn with consecrated chalk.

The inner circle says

+Agl+ +Adonai+ +Eloy+ +Tetragrammaton+

The middle circle lists the Name of the hour, Thamic

The angel of the hour, Raphael

The seal of Raphael

His ministers, Miel and Seraphiel

The name of the season I am working in, Casmaran

Angels of the season, Gargatel, Taniel, Gavriel

Sign of the season, Tubiel

Name of the Earth in this season, Festavi

Name of the sun in this season, Athemai

Name of the moon in this season, Armatus

Outer circle lists the aerial king of this day and his ministers Mediat Rex, Suquinos, and Sallales.

I used a triangle with its base pointing towards the circle, and its point towards the west.

As Valac is said to be a western spirit.

I also had a bell besides the triangle, so that I would be alarmed if any spirit manifested. It did not ring.

I can also share the template I created if anyones interested.

He's not exactly wrong, although his intention was probably just to mock you. You put a lot of time effort and money into the material props and details of this operation. It seems like you do not have much experience with this sort of thing and you are approaching it like a chemistry experiment, in which details like clean glassware, pure reagents, exact temperatures and good lab technique are the elements crucial to success. In what you are doing the material details are not what is important, what is important is your own mind, how much control you have over it, and things like control over spiritual and mental energy that you might call mana, chi, prana, kundalini or whatever. You didn't really give much detail as to what practices you have been doing prior to this so who knows, but the props are just that, and only contribute to the theatrics of the performance.

If you conjured the spirit in pursuit of a specific result I suppose we will just have to wait and see what you get.

I can see that, I and I do agree that rituals in general are theatrics based.

If we extend this analogy, I guess I haven't been a good actor. Though I don't know if being sure about the nature of the elements would have helped I think I would have preferred having the proper elements.

Another thing that came to mind is that the scene was just not quite right, as the sky became overcast while I was doing the operation and without my knowledge.

Either way it really wasn't that big of an expense, I already had the sword, which would've been the most expensive element, and the medals were worth the same as two beers. Everything else I kind of already have, except the chalk.

In your understanding, would you say the timing of the operation is also a prop?

It is difficult to hold so many things in your mind at one time during an operation. When you have physical objects, and you have done the work to intimately teach yourself those correspondences so that you know them on an intuitive level, the physical object allows you to focus on other things while your subconscious is reading those symbols. This lets you load up your mental plane with symbolic energy using your "muscle memory" from training.

If you don't have an immediate gut feeling of what those symbols mean, they are worthless.

What fucking purpose could you possibly want with these entities, anon? These entities are not friendly. They will do you no good. Keep away from them. YOU WILL become possessed.

Furthermore, unfortunately, just being on this website (particularly /pol/ or /x/) is enough to attract them into your life. More likely you need to take defensive countermeasures in order to keep them away from you, and out of your room at night (like myself).

There are many, many, many, many people possessed or oppressed by these entities without even knowing it. Unless you have innate psychic abilities, you're very likely to have them floating around you, influencing you in negative ways, without you even knowing it. If you do not have psychic abilities then I do not recommend engaging in occult ritual practice. You're just serving your body / mind / soul up for these beings to feast upon.

Realistically, if you're on 4chan, posting on /x/ (you probably post fascist bullshit on /pol/, too), and deciding to conjure these demons, then you're probably already massively under their influence without even knowing it.

Unfortunately, this website is a flux or a nexus for demons.

You don't even have to be that important or influential, but just a little bit.

They will come for you. They are everywhere on this plane. And they are especially everywhere on 4chan. So if you truly believed all of these elements will come together and manifest a spirit, it probably would. If not, well you're just not that suggestible. You can always try doing the ritual on a psychedelic, that's what i would do, because i am not suggestible at all. Otherwise, you're going to have to do the work in meditation and concentration exercises until you can alter your state of consciousness at will.

Your ordinary mundane state of mind is not going to manifest shit. That's the real secret.

I see. Part of the issue for me seems to have been that I felt a bit clumsy. Like the fact that the coal burnt too quickly and I had no backup due to forgetting the coals outside the circle, or the fact that I had some worries regarding whether I'd be able to carry the evocation successfully just before going into the circle.

That's a major issue I think, because I was thinking "well if it fails I can try it some other day."

I think it was a good experience, though because it did make me at the very least write down the whole skeleton of an evocation, which did give me some insights as to how they might work, or at least how it is structured. But when reciting some parts it felt really clumsy, as if I were reciting from memory rather than feeling the pressure of the calling. There's going to be a next time, I think I will spend more time in the invocation part of the ritual, and I might try to get a more secluded place if possible.

I will rehearse the rite. I used to practice martial arts and I know that feeling of practicing and practicing until you get your muscle memory just right, and the day when you are just before the circle you don't "think" you just act and let yourself be carried away.

I've said this before and I'll say this again. You can never get it "right." No matter how often you attempt, there will always be one detail that provides you with an excuse for failing. The reality is that demons are not real and even if they were, there's no reason the author of the Lemegaton would know the "one true" ritual for compelling them. But admitting that means admitting you wasted your time, so you obsess over minor details, constantly convinced that the next evocation will work out until you finally burn out and give up.

You are right Demons are as real as Jesus was. Those are Archetypes. For the evocation could works you need energy, read the Ars Goetia and watch what energy that demon liked, then embody his behavior to attain such energy. Only then you have to sacrifice yourself to reach the Adonai (high self) then fall again and invoke that Demon into yourself instead of the self.

The image is a cover of a book titled "Miracle of Love" by Neem Karoli Baba. The cover features a photograph of a man with a bald head, wearing a checkered shawl. He is holding a red flower in his left hand and looking to his right. The background is a soft pink. The text on the cover is in a script font and is arranged in two columns. The top column has the title "Miracle of Love" in a larger, bold font, while the bottom column contains the author's name "Neem Karoli Baba" in a smaller, regular font. The bottom right corner of the cover has the text "Compiled by RAM DASS" in a smaller, bold font. The overall style of the image is simple and appears to be a promotional or informational cover for the book.

is intricately structured, with a central core surrounded by a honeycomb-like structure. The bottom photograph shows a close-up of a large, gray, spiral-shaped mass of beeswax. The bees are clustered together, with some clustered at the top and others at the bottom, creating a sense of depth and texture. The bees appear to be in a state of rest, with no visible activity.

Overlaying the image is a text that reads, "You can't expect me to believe there is a race of creatures living in well-ordered homes who spend all day making candy while their evil counterpart hides out in menacing fortresses that augur only destruction." Because you're a resource that is being harvested by an exclusive group, and those are effective tools for holding onto power. You're not part of their group, but everything you do is in service to them, who are effectively The State, the volk, the reich, the empire, etc. The advancement of that fictional collective takes precedence over the individual. Shangri-La is a non-place, not physically real, but accessed through deep meditation and restructuring of your mental palace. Atlantis is theorized to have been real but completely destroyed. Agartha is confused conflation of Hyperboria and Asgard. I suggest you stop searching for a paradise and start making one instead.

FAQ

>What is Hellenism / Hellenic Polytheism?

Worship of the ancient Greek gods (Olympians, chthonic deities, heroes, daimones) using rituals, altars, and festivals. Modern “Hellenismos” often combines devotion with study of philosophy and classical sources.

>Is it just “paganism”?

Not really. “Pagan” is a Christian term. Hellenism is a living revivalist religion rooted in historical Greek practice.

>What is Neoplatonism and why is it relevant?

A philosophical system from Plotinus Proclus that explains the cosmos as emanations from “The One.” It influenced late antique Hellenism, theurgy, and esoteric thought.

Devotees often integrate contemplation of the One with ritual worship of gods.

>What is theurgy?

Ritual practice aimed at invoking or communing with divine intelligences.

>How do I start practicing?

Build a small altar for gods you feel drawn to, offer prayers, incense, libations, or simple daily rituals, study classical sources (Homer, Hesiod, Plutarch, Neoplatonists), start philosophical contemplation and meditation alongside ritual.

The image is a painting that depicts two figures in classical attire, likely from a mythological or classical era. The figure on the left is a muscular man with a muscular chest, wearing a red tunic and a laurel wreath on his head. He is holding a bow and arrow, and his gaze is directed towards the right. The figure on the right is a woman with long, flowing hair, wearing a blue tunic and a laurel wreath on her head. She is seated on a throne-like chair, and her gaze is directed towards the left. The background of the painting is a cloudy sky with a hint of greenery. The painting is rendered in a realistic style with attention to detail, and the colors are rich and vibrant, contributing to the overall dramatic effect of the scene.

I want to say a bit about Apollo, a central and somewhat enigmatic figure in Greek religion and thought. As a god of reason, Apollo is associated with light, harmony, and proportion. He is the patron of μουσική (mousikē), which for the Greeks encompassed not only music but poetry, rhythm, and education more broadly. Apollo's lyre symbolizes ordered sound, in contrast to chaotic noise, and his role as leader of the Muses places him at the center of intellectual and artistic cultivation. This aspect of Apollo aligns with the Greek ideal of sōphrosynē, moderation, self-restraint, and balance. At the same time, Apollo is the primary god of prophecy. The Pythia, Apollo's priestess, delivered oracles in a state of inspired speech, often described as ecstatic or possessed. These utterances were famously ambiguous, requiring interpretation and reflection rather than straightforward obedience.

Socrates stands as the clearest figure shaped by Apollo's influence. The Delphic oracle declared Socrates the wisest of men, a pronouncement Socrates treated as a puzzle rather than a fact. His philosophical activity becomes an attempt to understand what the god could mean, leading him to examine others' claims to knowledge and expose their inconsistencies. Socrates repeatedly attributes his mission to Apollo and describes himself as acting in obedience to the god. His daimonion, a divine sign that warns rather than instructs, reflects Apollo's mode of guidance.

Where, then, does reason sit in relation to prophecy? Is it its opposite, or the way we learn to live with it? Does clarity come first, or only after confusion has been endured? And what would it mean to take seriously the idea that philosophy began not as an escape from the divine, but as one of its consequences?

>Where, then, does reason sit in relation to prophecy?

You have to be a genius to figure it out ime. Do they make prophets geniuses beforehand, I don't know, but it's more like a game of 20 questions than reading a book, where there isn't even always a clear answer.

Agios O Helios Aniketos

Helios/Sol (the sun) is the supreme visible god, under whom other gods acted as intermediaries.

The sun is also a manifestation of the One, while gods are cosmic principles.

The gods are not merely ritual objects, though, but intelligible forces through which humans can approach the divine.

By the will of the gods do the prayers of mortals rise to the Unconquered Sun. Their intercession is expected.

>"He [Helios] carries aloft and lifts up our souls to the intelligible world."

>"The souls that he has thus freed he does not nail to other bodies... but carries aloft."

-Hymn to King Helios by Julian the Philosopher.

Where Helios/Sol is, is basically the junction of intellect, soul and physical light.

Helios/Sol is the image/manifestation etc. of the One within the physical world so our sun is far more than just another "star".

And to make something a bit more clear, the gods are intellegent, personal, rational and willing but at the SAME time embodiments of metaphysical functions.

Helios, the Unconquered Sun, is the supreme visible God, ruling beneath the ineffable One. He is the manifest image of the highest principle, and through him divine order flows into the cosmos.

Hymn to the Muses' Divine Madness

O Muses, daughters of Memory and Harmony divine,
Who fill the Father's works with rhythmic breath and light,
Pouring symmetry eternal through visible and unseen realms—
Descend upon the gentle soul, the pure and docile heart!

We hail Thee, gift primordial, source of all true song:
Not craft of mortal mind, but possession from above,

Illumination flooding the receptive vessel,
Where the self yields, steps forth from its own narrow bounds,
And merges in the uniform, the god-inspired flow.

Call it possession, for Thou claimest the whole of what Thou movest;
Call it madness, for the soul abandons her own acts, Forsakes the scattered thoughts, the hard resistant will,
And dances tireless round the divine center—rapt, awake!

The image is a close-up photograph of a statue of a classical female figure. The statue is made of a dark material, possibly bronze or a similar metal, and has a smooth, polished finish. The figure is depicted in profile, with her head turned slightly to the left. She has long, flowing hair that cascades down her back, and her eyes are closed, suggesting a serene or contemplative expression.

The statue is adorned with a headdress that features a large, ornate headpiece with a crest at the top. The headdress is intricately designed, with a series of decorative elements that include what appears to be a series of small, circular motifs or patterns. In her right hand, the statue is holding a small, ornate object that resembles a musical instrument, possibly a lyre or a similar stringed instrument. The instrument has a curved neck and a series of strings, suggesting it is designed for playing music.

The background of the image is a gradient of warm colors, transitioning from a darker shade at the top to a lighter one at the bottom. This gradient effect creates a sense of depth and adds to the overall composition of the image.

There are no visible texts or inscriptions on the statue, and the style of the image is realistic with a focus on the statue and its details. The photograph is taken in a way that

The image displays a section of a book or publication with a focus on ancient artifacts. The artifact in the foreground is a large, rectangular stone slab with a rough texture and a reddish-brown color. The slab is adorned with intricate carvings, depicting figures in various poses and actions. The figures are rendered in a style that suggests a historical or mythological context, with some figures appearing to be engaged in combat or ritualistic activities.

The text surrounding the artifact provides a historical context, describing the artifact as a "military, political, and religious monument" and stating that it is "the tomb of the god Narmis Sin." The text also mentions that the slab is "a god's tomb by the horns," indicating that it is a significant religious site. The text concludes with a quote that reads, "His back and fearless son are the same," which suggests a connection between the deity and the son, possibly indicating a divine lineage or a mythological narrative.

The style of the image is informative and educational, designed to provide a glimpse into the past and the cultural significance of the artifact. The use of the text and the detailed carvings on the slab serve to convey the historical and religious importance of the artifact.

All Gods exist undivided from eachother in terms of all being perfectly united to the One itself and completely undiminished and undifferentiated in this way. Each being a unity properly speaking or that which is a simple and complete whole after it's ineffable source. It is important to keep in mind hierarchy is only admitted in terms of their formal intellectual dominion which is posterior to them all and also a product of their procession. But yes, the highest Gods, the intelligible Gods, are in fact led by the Supreme Sovereign Ra-Khepri-Atum otherwise known as Lord Phanes Protagonos Erikepaaios to the Greeks or the unconquerable Mithras-Sol-Aion to the Romans who represents the summit of all noetic activity, life and power and in every way the superior one in terms of his kingdom. I tell you now his mighty name is also called IAO SABAOATH to whom, by whom and through whom every God is united. Not a daemon, but as crazy as it sounds I have experienced Epopteia, an Epiphany of a goddess, whom I always interpreted to be Cybele, but it could have been Demeter or Aphrodite Urania even. It was a very intense experience. I had consumed psilocybin and began doing some rituals when I received a vision where I made contact with a golden woman. I made eye contact. Normally, if you look into the eyes of a painting for example you will feel nothing, it's a one-way experience. But looking into her eyes, I could feel someone looking back at me. And then when I made eye contact, it was as if she made me feel yes, this is real and this eye contact is the confirmation you need that is real.

>Why do you/you think a polytheist may choose to prioritize worship of a god over the "All Father/Creator," the god of gods?

Familiarity is a reason. I only know I met one, and if I tell people about her and what she showed me, and they haven't heard about others, that might be who they would worship. There were oracles of specific gods and if you lived there that might be who you worship. Kind of like a local sports team.

The top right scene depicts a group of characters, including a knight in armor, walking through a desert landscape. The knight is wearing a helmet with a visor, and the scene is set against a backdrop of rocky terrain and sparse vegetation.

The style of the image is reminiscent of a medieval-themed video game, with a focus on the character's armor and the setting of the game.

The image shows a bronze statue of a female figure against a dark background. The statue is standing on a pedestal and is positioned in a way that suggests it is a figure of importance, possibly a goddess or a significant figure of ancient culture. The figure is depicted with a raised arm, holding a small object in her hand, which could be a symbol or a decorative element. The statue has a draped garment that flows down to the ground, and the figure's head is adorned with a headdress that includes a decorative element at the top, possibly a crown or a decorative piece. The statue's expression is calm and composed, with a neutral expression on the face. The style of the statue is reminiscent of ancient Greek or Roman art, characterized by its detailed craftsmanship and the use of bronze, which is a common material for such statues. There are no visible texts or inscriptions on the statue. The image is a photograph with a focus on the statue, and the lighting is even, ensuring that the details of the statue are clearly visible.

Philosophically, to be a real heathen, Hellenist or otherwise, one must be panpsychist as that is what the Ancient Greeks (and other ancients!) truly were.

Greek polytheism has more in common with Ancient Egyptian religion than with Judaism or Christianity. Hellenism has a very rich tradition and whole epoch of history in Egypt, also syncretism.

And Kabbalah or Jewish mysticism even has many borrowed Greek elements within, from the belief in reincarnation, to the practice of conjuring "spirits" i.e. angel/demons. Orthodox judaism has very little to say about any of the above, however and they want everyone to bow to their god.

They didn't just borrow these ideas they stole them to redirect the purpose of these powerful notions by inverting them only to be used as a spiteful spiritual instrument against the world. Also I have no issue with syncretism as I myself hold a syncretic faith, that isn't the problem.

Yes, Yahweh, originally, with all his fire and brimstone is probably a chthonic and volcanic deity, who over time underwent a transformation, got a gradual makeover. I recommend reading pic related, there's a good essay about Yahweh's transformation from a fire deity to a purported "universal" sky god.

You do raise a good point there. The Jews did take up much of the magic and religious practice of the Greeks. However, the transformation that did occur was from the exoteric to the esoteric, the Gods of the ancients, who were meant to be venerated publicly were debased into demons meant to be manipulated, bound and feared, they were forced underground (Aphrodite or Venus for example, became Lucifer), while Yahweh, the fire demon originally, became elevated above everything.

This is indeed the judeo-heresy at hand.

The solution is to grow some balls and to venerate the Gods of our forefathers in a public and dignified setting, build them shrines, give them offerings.

"Lastly, after essential heroes, an order of souls follows, who proximately govern the affairs of men, and are dæmoniackal according to habitude or alliance, but not essentially. These souls likewise are the perpetual attendants of the Gods, but they have not an essence wholly superior to man. Of this kind, as we are informed by Proclus in his MS. Scholia on the Cratylus, are the Nymphs that sympathize with waters, Pans with the feet of goats and the like. They also differ from those powers that are essentially of a dæmoniackal characteristic in this, that they assume a variety of shapes (each of the others immutably preserving one form) are subject to various passions, and are the causes of every kind of deception to mankind. Proclus likewise observes, that the Minerva which so often appeared to Ulysses and Telemachus belonged to this order of souls."

- Thomas Taylor, Book VII, Chapter XLV, Theology of Plato

The true interpretation of this seems to be satyric and nymphic orders of souls aren't daemons according to the strictest meaning in terms of them being those spirits most proximately conjoined to the intellectual Gods, but yet they can still be considered daemoniackal in a sense regarding their habitude. The nymph and the satyr are each allocated and attributed in activity to mundane and terrestrial concerns, especially those of mortals, by their substantial nature E.G. forests, mountains, plains, rivers, oceans, wells. So they being more differentiated in this way in their substance and they are indeed liable to passions and deception which isn't to be taken as misdirection to malevolent ends but rather a byproduct of their material fabrications. As to their multifarious appearances this is also explained by their mundanity, as matter can take on any shape itself and being as intimated as they are they can assume different shapes and guises appropriately related to with what they're substantially associated.

Fables, therefore, through the similitude of appellation conceal the things themselves. For spirits of this kind are similarly denominated with the Gods, the leading causes of their series. Hence they say, either that Gods have connexion with women, or men with Goddesses ... Proclus adds, that heroes are very properly denominated from Love, since Love is a great dæmon: and from the co-operation of dæmons heroes are produced ... Plato who was one of these heroes or demigods, was the offspring of Apollo in the way above explained by Proclus, as we are informed by Olympiodorus in his life of him. For he says, "It is reported that an Apolloniactal spectre had connection with Perictione the mother of Plato, and that appearing in the night to Aristo the father of Plato, it commanded him not to sleep with Perictione during the time of her pregnancy—which mandate Aristo obeyed."

- Thomas Taylor, Theology of Plato, Book VII

The secret and sweet theurgic path of love is herein highlighted, plebs won't understand anyways. I wouldn't expose this unless I thought the time was right as Proclus himself tells us to keep this from the many.

Yahweh wasn't originally a volcano deity. Remember, Jews originally come from a desert community. Even more so, a desert garden (the canaanite-phenician area).

Yahweh was a storm god. Makes sense, considering storms would be massively important for a people who are based around agriculture.

Jews have changed a lot over time. There were periods they got along with the Greeks/Romans, and periods they didn't. Ultimately it comes from them being surrounded by Big Military Empires and trying to distinguish themselves from their neighbors.

Huge mistake for obvious reasons. Look at the state of Judaism now, as it tried to reinvent itself into monotheism. Total mess of a situation.

The majority of pagan systems did not have a "supreme god".

Pagan philosophy will introduce, at times, a concept of "the one". This one may be personalized or unpersonalized. It may be the self of all things, or interconnecting forces. What plato & Parmenides call "monad" is what the Indians called "Brahman".

This is an animistic force. It isn't The Top God in the strictest sense of the word. It can take on those features. But this is a reflection of the divine intellect within you, not the end of the story.

This has two functions. One, it brings about the core pagan ideal; everything is balanced. There are different forces, they may collide with each other, but they are mutual. They are in sync. When they are not in sync, that is when problems begin. How can you stay in sync with these forces? That's where the importance of practice comes in.

The second function, is that it allows the worshipper to find his god or gods that he is most applicable towards. What suits his person? His family, even? Is his a city god, or a farming god? Does he pray to luck or Ward away nemesis? What is right for him, at this place and this time? He may choose a single god, or he may avail himself to a plethora. It all comes down to how best he can set himself right with the forces of the world.

In doing so, he is brought back to monad. Instead of a clash of chaotic forces, they are unified in balance. He is mindful, his life is fun, and he does not fret over what he cannot control.

Anonymous Mon 09 Feb 2026 10:54:27 No.41941562 Report

In this sense, every god he may choose is effectively Monad for him.

This being the case, we also see something else clearly. While the god who embodies creation, or time, or some other such weighty concept is of excellence to the normal philosopher, it is not applicable to the farmer who has no interest in such things.

This is a major fault of Christianity and modern monotheisms. They want you to have a one-size-fits-all god. This creates tension, anxiety and lackadaisicalness for people who are not suited to the 'intellectual' god of the Christians, who supposedly embodies all of existence. This is a foreign concept to someone, for example, rural and concerned with his home and his kin. What use does he have for this god? He will spin out his wheels trying to "interpret" it, or he will simply let it fall to the wayside and have it be a blasé aspect of his life, if that.

Whereas, otherwise, he could associate with the wild nymphs of his land, his hearth goddess, the gods of family, and find himself much more suited to this.

If you try to approach religion with "one size fits all" god mentality, it creates decay and destruction of religious life.

I'll try and make this simple. We should not consider the souls of dead men, beasts or plants to be daemons, but every other spirit, I.E. non-material intelligent non-human being, may be considered a daemon in a broad sense including the heroes, nymphs, satyrs and so on. This is since their natural agency, or will, is to act as servants to the Gods as builders using their ideas to govern creation such as the trees, forests, groves, plains, mountains, rivers, lakes, wells and, really, all things in the bounty of material nature are given to them. Though with this being said they are said to be confusing to deal with, opinionated or led by their desire at times but this due to their inner nature being closely tied to the ever-changing fabric of our material world and their great concern for the goings on of mankind, it's not because any bad motivations, they are good creatures. Also they can change the way they look to men because of this same closeness to matter which, being an unlimited potential, itself changes shape into all kinds of things and takes on many appearances. Hope this helps.

You probably don't need a practice to uphold balance on a personal level, which could be done without any religion. I think practice truly comes into place when you live in a way that has a major destabilizing effect on the land that is difficult to mitigate through mere care and reciprocity. Humans have a capacity to delay the destructive consequences of imbalance years, generations, even centuries into the future, depending on their technological level and the peculiarities of the environment. Sometimes these imbalances may be imperceptible, that's when a magical/religious practice truly comes into place, directing human activity in a way that does not disrupt the larger balance while covering the blind spots. Then again, such a practice is at odds with civilization. It corrodes over time.

I'm not gonna respond to your whole post, just this part here.

Correct practice is a foundational part of Hellenic, indeed generally "pagan" religions. You can't have Hellenism without correct practice.

All of the religion is about how to show up in life in a way that honours it and is in sync with it. This is why many philosophers stressed the need for things such as moderation.

This is also what crucially sets it apart from modern religions, which borrow the novel concept of "orthodoxy" from Christianity. Whereas new religions are based around ideology and correct belief, old religions are practical and about what we can do that brings us and the world around us definite benefit. This is why in greece, leisure and fun was highly important. Even education, is set into this way.

Practice isn't JUST the ritual. It's a whole entire world of things. It's a good world, and I invite everyone to join it. There's freedom, sweet air and good festivals to be had.

Yes, that's why they're heretics. They invert the symbols and images of this or that deity in an attempt to manipulate and abberate mundane order. The Gods themselves cannot be evil and I praise Set, Saturn and Cronus as perfect unities.

The image is a painting that depicts a woman seated on a shell, which is the central object in the composition. The woman is adorned in a white, flowing dress with a high neckline and a gold necklace. She holds a small mirror in her right hand, and her left hand is raised to her face, as if she is examining or adjusting her appearance.

Above the woman, there are two white birds with their wings spread out, as if they are flying. The background of the painting features a serene seascape with waves gently lapping against the shore and a cliff visible in the distance. The overall color palette is warm, with the woman's dress and the shell's color being the most prominent. The style of the painting is reminiscent of the Romantic era, characterized by its emphasis on emotion, nature, and the human form. The artist has skillfully used color and form to create a sense of movement and depth, with the woman's pose and the birds' wings suggesting a sense of grace and freedom. The painting is rich in detail and texture, with the woman's dress and the shell's surface being the most detailed elements.

Does anyone else increasingly see Jesus as an incarnation or Avatar of Dionysus? God in the biblical story is Zeus and Mary is exactly like Semele. I would imagine Zeus would do this to teach the stubborn Jews the Dionysiac Mysteries about life, death, and rebirth.

If we understand Christianity through this approach, the Jesus cycle takes its place with the other Demi-gods under Jove and his great Olympian Order. This makes Christianity intelligible to Hellenism and provides a pathway to coexist with all the kino Paganesque elements of Catholicism for example

This was popular a few years ago during the Jupiter vs. Saturn larps. One insider spoke of them like Sanchuniathon, literal beings who lived among and meddled in human society. They said the different sons of Zeus (Apollo, Hercules, Ares, etc.) were results of what we'd call breeding programs for supersoldiers. They claimed the real Jesus was Zeus' way to co-opt Kronos' jews by raising his own supersoldier demigod among them, but Kronos didn't like this obviously and his cult thwarted the demigod's attempt to rally the Levant behind Zeus/Ba'al (again.) That's supposedly where the eastern cults of Dionysos/Jesus arise and why in a long pattern of Zeus' demigods we suddenly have one who's sacrificed early and used to infiltrate Zeus' pagan city-state empire, and why "Greek" gods like Dionysos who didn't originate in Greece at all were so steeped in Semitic practices that were otherwise barbaric, and which the Greeks diverted to 'titanic' practices after Kronos.

>Her cult would spread pretty easily in Catholic and Orthodox strongholds I think.

The cult of Hecate is actually really popular and quite developed among younger women. I would say it's currently the strongest Hellenist revival going on right now. Hecate and Persephone are in a sense Chthonic 'aspects' of Aphrodite, who are all links in the chain going to Rhea, the cosmic divine feminine. If we think of Aphrodite Urania as the Celestial 'ascent' of the soul, then Hecate can likewise be understood as the Chthonic 'descent' of the soul'. So the soul would have to journey through both these Goddesses to reunite with the divine feminine aspect of Logos.

The link to the Virgin Mary via Persephone is pretty short in reality as well. They are almost 1:1 the same figure. In most Mediterranean Catholic countries today for example, funeral homes will still show a Virgin Mary lit up at their window where she is playing the role of a psychopomp figure.

The Dyad, by bringing multiplicity to the One, creates the plurality of Unities (Henads), who are the Gods. Thus Rhea becomes the Mother of the Gods by substantiating multiple images of the Father, Kronos.

The ancient Pythagoreans called Rhea "The Ever-Flowing" (To Aenaon) and connected Her name with Rheô (to Flow) and Rhoê (Flux, Flow, Stream), a derivation confirmed by modern linguistics, which traces them all to the Indo-European root sreu- (to flow). This is because Primary Matter is fluid, for it has no determinate boundaries, within or without; Matter is ever changing, always in flux.

Another word correctly derived by the ancients from this root is rhythmos, which means Rhythm, but also recurring motion, measured motion, and time. This is because the Indefinite Dyad creates Otherness, and therefore all the oppositions governed by Kronos and Rhea: Unity/Multiplicity, Light/Dark, Male/Female, and many others. Whenever there is a tension between opposites there will arise an oscillation between them, a cyclic approach to One then the Other. Therefore, Rhea transforms measureless Eternity (Aiôn) into determinate Time (Khronos), symbolized by the cyclic alternation of Light and Dark. (By creating Time, She also creates Space.) Further, Rhea governs all cyclic processes, on Earth and in Heaven; She creates the Universe as a Harmonia of opposites. (See Opsopaus, "Lib. Oct. Mut." for universal structures in the tension of opposites.)

However, Rhea Herself exists outside of Time, and thus She governs Motionless Motion. This is because She is concerned only with cyclic change, and therefore with the numerical ratios among the rhythms of these changes; She governs their Harmonic Relations. (In modern scientific terminology, we could say that She oversees the "frequency domain" rather than the "time domain," which is the province of Hera, Her daughter.)

The ancients also connected rhythmos to arithmos (Number), but modern linguists trace arithmos to a different Indo-European root, rê(i)- (to reason, count), from which we also get such words as reason, rational, ratio, rate, and rhyme. Nevertheless, the ancient connection informs us about how Pythagoreans understand Rhea's responsibility for Number. This is natural, for the Indefinite Dyad is the principle of Plurality itself, which separates one thing from another, but also of the Matter that allows one thing to be different from another, by substantiating multiple instances of a Form.

Rhea governs the levels of Being above the Intellect (see Proclus' Seven Levels of Reality, below), which explains why a total grasp of Number is beyond our intellectual abilities. (Modern mathematics addresses only an impoverished shadow of Number.) The properties of Number fall into two classes, corresponding to the two phases of Emanation: Procession and Reversion. For Number comprises both the Power to Generate everything but also the Power to Unify everything. In particular, Number discriminates the holistic thought of Kronos into the distinct Ideas, the articulate Logos, of Zeus. But also, by Reversion, Number redirects and reunifies the Ideas toward the One.

This leads us to the important concept Noêsis, which is usually translated Intellection, but is better understood as a process of holistic intuition, especially at this level, which is prior to Time, and therefore prior to sequential thought. Rhea, as Mediator, is the intellectual (or noetic) process connecting the Divine Intellect (Zeus) at the next lower level, with the object of His intellection, Pure Being (the Monad), at the next higher. View SameGoogleiqdbSauceNAOTrace brueghelflowerscybele.jpg, 458KiB, 1174x1800 The image is a detailed and vibrant oil painting that depicts a scene of a garden or orchard with various figures engaged in activities. The background is filled with lush greenery and a dark sky, adding to the overall atmosphere of the scene. >>41965518

But Rhea's domain is also the level of Life, and therefore Proclus says, "Life is Intellection" (Zôê Noêsis). On the one hand, this means that Life is fundamentally identical to holistic Intuition. On the other, it means that the Ideas are themselves living Archetypes. The Chaldean Oracles (fr. 56) tell us,

>Of Blessed Noerics Rhea is the Source and Stream; >for, first in Power, in Wombs Ineffable all things >receiving, on The All She pours this whirling brood.

(The "Noerics" are Archetypes living in the intuiting Divine Mind, and may be identified with the Gods.)

The etymological connection between Mother and Matter is well-known, but it is worthwhile to look at it more closely. The Indo-European root mâter (mother) is the origin of our word Mother, as well as the cognate Greek and Latin words (Mêtêr, Mater). The latter is the source of Matrix, which originally meant the Womb or anything else in which something originates, develops, is nourished, or is contained. Matrix, in turn, is the root of Matter and Material, which referred originally to an originating, nourishing, or sustaining substance.

We have seen that the Mother is the Life-Giving Goddess, the source of Ever-Flowing Matter. Therefore She provides the Quantities (cf. Number) of Matter needed for the sustenance of everything in creation. She is the Goddess of the Primordial, Life-Giving, All-Sustaining Earth. Demeter's name means Earth Mother (Dê-Mêtêr, from Dê, an alternative form of Gê or Gaia). Pherekydes calls Her Khthoniê, which means "She of the Earth"; an epithet of Underworld as well as Earth Goddesses. Indeed, Demeter and Persephone are called "The Khthoniai," and Khthôn is a name of the Earth Goddess. Her special realm is dark Tartarus, which stands opposite to shining Olympus, ruled by Kronos. Tartarus is the hidden region of dark Primordial Matter, the Foundation of Existence. The Black, Dark, Obscure Earth (Khthôn or Gaia Melaina) was proverbial in ancient Greek.

The image is a sepia-toned photograph featuring two classical sculptures. On the left, there is a male figure with a beard and a muscular build, seated with his legs crossed. He is wearing a toga and has a draped garment draped over his left shoulder. His right hand is raised, holding a scroll. The male figure's expression is one of contemplation or deep thought.

On the right, there is a female figure with long hair and a draped garment that covers her from the neck down to her feet. She is seated with her legs crossed and her hands resting on her lap. Her gaze is directed downwards, and her expression is one of sadness or introspection.

The background of the image is black, which contrasts with the sepia tone of the sculptures, making them stand out. There are no discernible texts or additional objects in the image. The style of the image is reminiscent of classical art, with a focus on the detailed craftsmanship of the sculptures.

Alright. When Christianity came into existence, they denied the sacredness of nature and put it into a subordinate role underneath mankind. Doing this, they poisoned the culture and made it impossible for religions such as Hellenism to survive.

This is why Christianity thrives as much as it does. It built a hyper-real "fake world", disconnecting people from embodied experience.

They symbolically "killed" the Great God Pan. Pan, who is the god of the wild Nature and all things.

If we are going to win this 2000 year long culture war, we need to engage in a holy meme war, that invokes the great god pan.

God Pan can be revived through advanced Meme Magick.

The goals of the Holy Pan War are

- >Erode & destroy Christian control of culture. Which is hyperreal & technological
- >Shift cultural mode to Hellenic or "Pagan" one, which is embodied & natural

Suggested Common Components for Pan Memetics

- >Nostalgia (especially for "what could have been" or "what's been lost".)
- >Nature (beautiful/cute/scary perceptions are all acceptable)
- >Pan (duh) and other nature gods & minor divinities.
- >Embodied experience (memes should deliberately cause feels and/or remind people of the superiority of embodied experience.)
- >Luddism
- >Anti consumerism
- >Leisure as being more important than work
- >Phrases such as "Pan lives" or similar.

We will know were successful when

1. Normies begin producing Pan Memetics on their own. ESPECIALLY if they declare Pan Lives.
2. Normies start proliferating Pagan Neo-luddism.
3. Hellenic or "Pagan" culture becomes preferred and dominant. (Nature reverence, Eudaimonia, Embodied Experience).

wEIRD PSeud question:

if matter is consciousness in a lower level, and evil is the negation of existence (consciousness/death) then that related to i remember medievals thought evil had no existence and was the privation of existence, and that makes me wonder if god even created satan at all, since you cant create that which does not exist, also i guess makes you wonder how that which doesn't exist can have such a powerfull effect on the living, "evil is the absence of good" type philosophy, so god didnt create evil or satan also makes me wonder if evil could be either:

something like anti matter (like dark energy or black matter) or a pure philosophical nothingness, and if maybe the former could be more akin to philosophical noithingness due to their effect (but im not a physicist i have no ide what they do i think they accelerate gravitational expansion or something)=

Additionally, Memetics for "Pagan futurism" should be produced.

>"Pagan futurism"/ "Romantic futurism"

The idea for this concept is to construct a movement which both envisions a distinctly "pagan" future and also constructs it in the present moment.

The pagan future reveres nature. Not simply being "ecological", it goes beyond that. It connects with nature as a fundamental part of life, a crucial aspect of the emotional experience. It sees populations whom are all intimately aware of the natural world around them. Where people know all the names of their local animals, the stars in the sky, and the natural plants terrain of their land. These and the seasons themselves even all become part of the emotional and ritual world for everyone.

It sees on that place, in that world, a total dearth of pollution. The environment protected, sacred groves abound. The air will be so clean it tastes sweet, one could hear the sound of the wind without the drone of polluting machinery.

Technology not banned, but forced to become modes of protecting and expressing nature and experience. Not conquering and destroying them. Technology is secondary to nature, limited, and designed with the protection of Human Experience and Nature in mind.

Pagan futurism imagines that societies rooted entirely in embodied experience. People do not live an unexamined, dissociative life. Every aspect of their existence is deeply mindful, rooted to their lived and subjective experience. Emotions are given due reverence, along with their place in the body. As part of the body.

This will see a return to pagan festival and rituals. Along with a focus on art, virtue, philosophy and ritual as the highest goods. We see worlds where there are cities decked in flowers, perfumes in the air, and statues clothed and announced in oils and incense. A man may leave his home during the height of summer and come to a festival where the locals are celebrating in harmony with nature. (1/2)

He may join in, be baptized joyously with cool water, and find himself singing and dancing.

He may also find special holidays dedicated to retreat and simplicity of mind, if he is part of a meditative paganism. He may even do both.

His landscape will not be dominated by cars, but instead be designed for easy flow of human & animal activity. The buildings designed to evoke deep sensory change and feelings in his mind and body.

If he is a Buddhist and among buddhists, he may step on soft coconut fibers all around him. See lotuses and other flowers decked around. He will hear, even at the local market, a constant chanting of sacred mantras, sutras and dharanis all through the air.

The hellene may himself instead step on sweet rose petals and hear chanting of orphic hymns.

The same likewise for different folks of different types. One may even encounter the festivals of his and others groups happening simultaneous and none too far away, perfectly in harmony.

He is in harmony with friends, family and neighbors. He does not worry about stranger danger, but instead, trusts in his local community.

Thus the life of all people will be defined by Eudaimonia & Virtue. People will work simply, and realistically. Short hours, non complex. They will take up the jobs they enjoy, which bring no evil. Even the janitors, street sweeps, and others will work their vocation out of genuine joy.

Why? Because his highest priority are eudaimonia and virtue. He does not concern himself with what is unnecessary. He only concerns what brings him and others happiness, flourishing & what is virtuous. This will be the focus for his entire world.

Which all else roots deep into.

It is a world that is fundamentally different from the Christian one. A world where time is cyclical...and delightfully slow.

It is a world you can experience. One you can make and revive here and now. For yourself and future generations.

Jesus was a prophet guided by Hermes until he compromised with the enemy after which he was on his own and was easily defeated. Didn't do everything he was supposed to. Christianity was a ploy co-opting his death and isn't fundamentally compatible with, well, reality, or Hellenic polytheism. Using aesthetics from it isn't being the same thing, and Christians, namely later, who relied on their own consciences in the name of the religion don't embody the nature of Christianity either. I think it's best abandoned.

You've already heard about Abrahamic faiths repackaging pagan ideas as their own. They did this to make Jesus, too, and many of his attributes come straight from Hermes (he also has some from Dionysos, Sol/Mithras, etc.)

Jesus: son of the skyfather sent as messenger to men

Hermes: son of the skyfather sent as messenger to men

Jesus: sent by skyfather to redeem humans out of hell (originally called Hades.)

Hermes: sent by skyfather to lead humans through Hades

Jesus: grew up with scoundrels, described as patron of thieves and all commoners regardless their backstory

Hermes: grew up as scoundrel, described as patron of thieves and friend to all men

Jesus: a wandering traveling magician who uses the Logos (rhetoric) and sorcery, called leader of the herds of men

Hermes: god of wandering travelers, pharmakeia and magic, rhetoric and symbolism, god of herds and shepherds

Jesus: described as the right hand of the skyfather, his own son and highest servant

The image is a photograph of a classical sculpture, likely from the Renaissance period, depicting two figures in a dynamic pose. The figures are carved from white marble, and the sculpture is set against a dark, ornate background that includes columns and a ceiling with intricate detailing.

The figure on the left appears to be a male figure, with a draped garment and a flowing mane, suggesting a dynamic pose. The figure on the right is a female figure, also carved from white marble, with a flowing dress and a flowing mane, which also suggests a dynamic pose. Both figures are depicted with their arms raised, and their heads are turned towards each other, indicating a moment of interaction or communication.

The sculpture is placed on a pedestal, which is also made of white marble and has a similar design to the figures. The overall style of the sculpture is highly detailed and realistic, with a focus on the human form and the interaction between the figures. The use of white marble and the classical style of the sculpture suggest that it is likely from a museum or a significant public art collection.

The image is a painting depicting a scene on a beach. In the foreground, there are five women, each wearing a different colored dress. The woman on the left is wearing a pale pink dress, the one next to her is in a light green dress, the third woman is in a dark green dress, the fourth woman is in a light blue dress, and the fifth woman is in a light purple dress. They are all holding objects that resemble baskets or containers. The women are standing on the sand, and the background shows a rocky cliff with a body of water and a small group of people on the shore. The painting has a realistic style with attention to detail, and the colors are vibrant, contributing to the overall impression of a lively and dynamic scene.

You can also chant the orphic hymn to apollo

<https://www.hellenicgods.org/the-orphic-hymn-to-apollo>

When doing the rituals, try to maintain an embodied mindfulness during. Be aware of what you're doing/saying as you do it.

When doing solely chanting/reciting, focus on the sound of what you're saying, not the content.

Additionally, offer sacrifices. Play music, etc. find things you can offer to Apollo that are appropriate.

The Void, Abyss, etc starts to talk back eventually. Simple as. When it does those impulses affect and change us in real physiological ways, albeit tiny in the brain. You likely already know the ways an unconscious approach can channel emotion or information not otherwise consciously available, from the beyond, and you've likely seen the ways it can lead practitioners to mania, grandiosity, depression, and other states related to the sudden imbalance caused by external input. Worshipping Dionysos or any other spirit like Babalon/Kali or Shiva who acts as "psychedelic psychopomp" is actually calling upon their authority to direct and guide this process. True sorcerers keep one foot in this unconscious abyss to pull data from their past lives, interface with the astral in waking form, and accomplish other feats by channeling that metaphorically-dark influence into the light of conscious thought. Gods like Dionysos, etc., both sponsor those goals and also safeguard more earnest initiates from the lower ranked astral entities.

That's because it is much deeper. Dionysus is the son of Zeus. The story is, Zeus had a son called Zagreus. Baby Zagreus was ripped apart and murdered by vengeful Titans.

Luckily, Athena found and preserved Zagreus' heart. So Zeus zapped the Titans into dust and mixed that dust with the heart of Zagreus, thus mixing the wickedness of the titans with the divine spark of Zagreus, and used that to put Dionysus in Semele. So Zagreus dies and is reborn as Dionysus with the divine spark of Zeus as well as the flaws of the Titans. We are descended from that mix as well.

Dionysiac rituals are an imitation of the tearing apart of Zagreus, the grapes flesh are ripped apart and the blood is drunk as wine. Since Dionysus is dead and reborn, he brings back with him the wisdom that one can only get by traveling to the underworld and returning.

He also takes over the duties of Apollo during the winter months, when Apollo travels to Hyperborea

Also, another interesting detail about Dionysus is that he is the '13th God'. The Greeks worshipped the 12 Gods of Olympus, Olympus being their Celestial kingdom and 12 representing the harmony of their rule over it. With Dionysus being the '13th God', he breaks the balance of 12, turning the perfectly balanced circle into a spiral, breaking the harmony of 12 and turning the circle into a spiral, moving away from the static harmony of the Olympic gods' rule and introducing progress into their reign, changing the state of the world from a perfect, all encompassing whole, the Alpha state, to move toward the Omega point. Don't forget that Dionysus is a demi-god, born from Zeus and the mortal Semele, made from the divine heart of Zagreus and the cursed ash of Titans

You will see people associate this with Christianity, but they don't understand that Christ is literally Dionysus

He basically got tricked into "agreeing to it" while he was around 12 years old and couldn't reliably tell the difference between genders without grabbing peoples crotches (he thought it was an offer to come back for a meal some time). She then held him to the promise 7ish years later when he's around 20, has forgotten who she even is, and after he admitted he STILL doesn't know what married means (and has to keep asking her to stop touching him). He got married by accident. Goku was raped. He probably thought having a kid was some kind of training to defeat demon king Piccolo jr. He is an actual brain damaged retard. He gives a fuck about people but the only way he's able to respond to this is by fighting something or training to fight. He is fucking annoying though.

deity is depicted in a blue-toned, light-skinned complexion, with a red and gold headdress adorned with jewels. The deity's hair is styled in a long, flowing manner, and the face is painted with a serene expression. The deity is wearing a yellow and gold sari, a necklace with multiple beads, and a red and gold belt.

The deity is holding a long, curved, gold-colored flute, which is held in a manner that suggests it is being played. The background of the image is a vibrant, green landscape with trees and foliage, and there is a white swan swimming in the water. The overall style of the image is realistic with a focus on the deity's intricate details and the naturalistic setting. There are no texts present in the image.

The image depicts a stylized representation of a figure, likely a deity or a mythological character, with a predominantly blue and gold color scheme. The figure's face is characterized by a fierce expression with large, red eyes and a wide, open mouth, suggesting a sense of anger or power. The eyes are accentuated with a red tint, and the mouth is adorned with a large, curved, red tongue. The figure's hair is styled in a manner that gives it a serpentine appearance, and it is adorned with a necklace and a decorative headpiece.

The figure is seated on a throne-like seat, which is embellished with intricate gold and red designs, and is supported by a large, ornate, gold-colored base. The throne's design includes a circular medallion with a pattern that includes floral motifs and geometric shapes. The figure's attire includes a blue robe with a red and gold border, and a sash with a pattern that includes a combination of red and gold colors.

The background of the image is a rich, deep red with gold accents, which contrasts with the blue and gold of the figure's attire and the throne. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of traditional Asian art, with a focus on the intricate details and the use of color to convey emotion and power. There are no discernible texts or inscriptions within the image. The image is a digital rendering, likely created for artistic or religious purposes.

I don't really see any contradictions, and Atman is preached as Buddha in the final Mahayana Sutra, the Nirvana Sutra. I think Buddha is an incarnation of Vishnu, as I believe it says in the scriptures. Bodhi means intelligence in Sanskrit. It could just be the Sanskrit worship of Intelligence, under a particular Avatar of Vishnu.

Not necessarily a self/soul, but I agree the fundamental difference between most Buddhist and Hindu philosophies is the concept of externality.

Some thing or some I or some dynamic being eternally present and self-defining/independent = Hinduism

There is no thing or self or even system that is eternal or independent. All things are temporary and relative. = Buddhism

Anatman and anatta means "not atman" and "not self". There's an important distinction between "no" and "not" and they have very different meanings. Atman is not this, atman is not that. What is left?

It's not obliteration, but liberation from thoughtforms creating an identity of a self. What you think you become and create, even more so in the spirit world where you can instantly create, travel and become what you think.

I am certain that the death process is some kind of trap and everything hinges on us being strong enough to reject everything offered to us, including reunion with deceased family, at the end of our life. We all know about the reincarnation soul trap here but it's becoming more and more obvious. I don't know if I will be strong enough to turn away from my mother and pet animals I've had waiting for me in "heaven", but I will have to try to resist. It's probably not really them anyway.

The image is a painting that depicts a scene of religious or spiritual significance. At the center, there is a figure holding a cross, which is a common symbol in Christian iconography. This figure is surrounded by a multitude of figures, some of whom appear to be in a state of distress or agony, while others are in a state of ecstasy or rapture. The figures are depicted in various poses, some with their hands raised, and others with their heads bowed. The background is filled with a dense array of figures, some of whom are also holding crosses, suggesting a theme of sacrifice or martyrdom. The color palette is rich and varied, with warm tones dominating the scene, which could be indicative of a setting sun or a setting sun's light. The overall style of the painting is highly detailed and realistic, with a focus on the interplay of light and shadow to create a sense of depth and three-dimensionality. The genre of the painting is religious art, likely intended to convey a message of faith, sacrifice, and the divine.

I need to achieve ghosts to escape this hellscape. Everything is imperfect and evil." The author's name, "Gvinda Mixan," is displayed at the top of the tweet.

The image is a cover art for a music album titled "The Smashing Pumpkins." The central figure is a woman with blonde hair, wearing a green dress with a red sash, and a red and white headband. She is seated on a yellow star, which is positioned against a backdrop of a starry night sky with planets and stars. The text on the image is in a serif font and reads "Melon Collie and the Infinite Sadness" in a larger, bold font at the top, and "The Smashing Pumpkins" in a smaller, regular font at the bottom. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of vintage or retro album covers, with a focus on the title and the central figure.

If you're hoping to "win" death like it's some kind of game something is wrong. You should have strong enough faith in God to deliver you, if you don't have that kind of faith you're going to be devoured by the higher beings on the other side and they're literally going to laugh in your face for refusing salvation and thinking you had some kind of plan to beat them. You're not going to somehow figure death out while in your mortal form and then "beat" the archons.

What you need to do is be actually saved from death. This is why ETERNAL LIFE is a literal offering from THE MOST HIGH. If you're not taking that offering seriously you are a LOST SOUL. There's no other way to twist it around.

If you think you're not lost because you went to church or call yourself a Christian you're really just a religious person and that's absolutely not the same as being saved.

Stop running from the truth. The beings who control this reality and yes even the astral and yes even the gates of death are 1000x greater than you can imagine. You're not going to outsmart them. You HAVE to get RIGHT with the MOST HIGH. It's so simple and yet intellectuals find a way to complicate it and inflate their ego thinking they're going to will themselves into being Neo in the Matrix.

HUMBLE yourself or pay the price. It's really that simple.

The image is a vibrant and detailed painting that depicts a scene from a traditional Asian culture. At the center, there is a large, fierce-looking demon with a red face, red eyes, and a wide grin. The demon is surrounded by a variety of characters and elements, including a temple with a golden roof, a group of people, and animals. The temple is surrounded by a lush landscape with trees, mountains, and a river. The colors used in the painting are predominantly red, blue, green, and yellow, creating a vivid and lively atmosphere. The style of the painting is reminiscent of traditional Asian art, with its use of bold colors and intricate details. The painting is framed by a red border, and there is a red and gold emblem at the top left corner. The overall composition and the detailed depiction of the demon suggest that this painting could be a part of a larger artwork or a religious icon.

You're correct. And many buddhists have given up on achieving enlightenment and are instead settling for worshipping various Archons in the forms of gods and goddesses. By giving up like that they find a kind of peace of mind, but ultimately they will never escape the wheel of karma which they claim to base their entire philosophy around.

As Megami Tensei becomes more popular our entire society is being destroyed. Because these video games are full of demonic portals and rituals which are intended to induce mass possessions within the youth. Look around in genZ. It is easy to see they are possessed with evil spirits. The method of their possession was a videogame series, created by the wealthy, named "Megami Tensei", along with the associated "Personna" spin-off series, which is full of occult symbolism and rituals ripped directly from The Lesser Key of Solomon and which functions as a possession ritual for the uninformed children who play it.

>Bashar doesn't really compel to me DESU

I can see the spiritual and metaphysical sides of things because from a young age specifically since my teenage years I've been able to notice symbols hidden in movies and games and I don't mean literal sigils /x, just things that were clearly placed there with meaning and sure sure I was a conspiracy theorist since i was small. Watched ancient aliens with my mom thats probably where it began, but I wouldn't become spiritual for a while, I went through some rough stuff when I was a young teen, praying to god on futon curled up in the fetal position wondering why I didn't here gods voice like so many christians believed, or why he wasn't helping me or feel the presence of holy spirit.

Now as I got older and explored spirituality I would learn of the name yahweh and for years I would explore and listen to people, no I'm no plato I couldn't tell you everything but what Bashar claims seems close to the truth I just hate how he keeps calling it god and not source. Then again middle aged ex christians seem to be his audience you know if you know.

I don't like how people keep saying you need to wake up from reality and that its a illusion, no its a experience granted the ones shoving symbolic things in our faces constantly have not good intent but what comes after to me at least would arguably be more dream like, or a "perfect world".

The image shows a religious iconography within a building, likely a church or cathedral. At the center, there is a large, ornate sunburst with rays radiating outward, and within this sunburst, the letters "IHS" are prominently displayed in a golden, serif font. This sunburst is surrounded by a group of figures that appear to be angels or saints, each holding a staff, and they are positioned in a semi-circular formation around the sunburst. The figures are also golden, and they are depicted in a classical style, with detailed clothing and facial features.

The background of the image features a ceiling with a fresco or painting depicting a scene with figures and a landscape, which is partially obscured by the sunburst and the figures. The ceiling is adorned with ornate carvings and patterns, and the walls are decorated with marble or stone, contributing to the overall grandeur of the space. The lighting in the image is soft and warm, enhancing the golden tones of the figures and the sunburst. The style of the image is a close-up photograph, focusing on the intricate details of the religious iconography and the architectural elements of the building.

I always wondered, if the Roman Catholic Church really integrated so many pagan religions into itself (and it did, along with the holidays and rituals) wouldn't they have found a way to push Jesus to the side and just become a pagan institution? But they don't. Why? Because Christ is King. And because the Catholic church keeps IESUS or Isis Horus Set or Jesus on the throne, the Vatican remains the seat of power for the entire planet. Unchallenged. It has been this way for millennia. And why? Because they aren't pretending. They are literally maintaining reverence and holiness of Christ. They aren't pretending to be Christian or believe in Jesus. They KNOW his power.

Does this make sense to anyone else? I know worldly power and wealth is NOT necessarily Godly, but I also believe the power of God is in fact manifested in this institution. And when people try to dismiss the Vatican or the Catholic church as being pagan, I feel like they are missing the point. CHRIST IS KING. Even in a supposedly pagan or luciferian institution. It's just a FACT. CHRIST is THE WAY. The ONLY way. If there were another way, the Catholic church would have adopted it by virtue of being the most powerful institution.

The image is a screenshot of a webpage with a title "the Bible" at the top. Below the title, there is a section titled "The Bible is a written text used by the Catholic Church." The text continues with a description of the Bible's origins, mentioning that it was written by the Catholic Church and is a collection of sacred texts. The text also mentions the Roman Catholic Church's contribution to the Bible, stating that the Bible is a compilation of sacred texts from the Old Testament and the New Testament.

The image also includes a photograph of a book with a blue cover, which is the Bible. The book is open, revealing its title page and a page with the text "The Bible" written in large letters. The book is placed on a blue surface, and the photograph is taken from a side angle, showing the spine of the book. The photograph is a close-up of the book's cover, with the title and text clearly visible.

The image is a screenshot from a digital document, likely a webpage, and it is designed to provide information about the Bible. The text is in English, and the image is clear and well-lit, making it easy to read. The style of the image is informative and educational, aiming to provide a concise overview of the Bible's origins and significance.

Nta but I get it. People can proclaim to follow a noble king and it is fine and good. What's not good is when it develops into a cult that just tries to make people gullible fools, aggressive towards people who are different or otherwise are harmful or antiethical.

Just think about how some people raise kids with religion: indoctrination starts at a young age. Whereas Christ created the road from nothing, following curiosity and developing insight into human nature. Many noble souls also came before Christ. Calling them false is kind of outlandish.

The image is a black and white illustration that depicts a figure seated in the center, surrounded by celestial bodies and figures. The figure appears to be a bearded man with long hair, wearing a robe and a long cloak. He has a serious expression and is holding a staff in his right hand. The background features a large, circular opening that seems to be a portal or gateway, with stars and a crescent moon visible through it. The figure is surrounded by celestial bodies such as a crescent moon, a star, and a crescent moon, which are depicted in a stylized manner. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of classical or medieval art, with a focus on the figure and the celestial elements.

The funniest thing about gnostic anti-christians is they don't realize Christ was literally the giga-gnostic who went all the way and kicked everyone's ass top to bottom including the Demiurge. That's why he holds the keys to heaven AND hell. But gnostics are so overwhelmed by the sinister nature of religious powers and archons that they struggle to comprehend that anyone could be above it.

Jesus is God who is the most high one true God beyond time and space. There is nothing to worry about for we who walk with HIM. Ever wonder why the demiurge is so angry? Because he got his ass kicked.

God bless.

Also don't forget if you aren't already, consider partaking in Lent which is currently underway. Fasting and prayer in observance of Christ's 40 days of fasting to defeat Satan, culminating in Easter Sunday!

For many including myself that means abstaining from meat or foregoing other dietary things, maybe some true hardcore fasting (just water no food) for a few days.

I just like the idea of being lockstep with billions of Christians in this way, and it really does feel great to pray while fasted. It is THE WAY, as known by Christ and the Prophet Daniel.

The image is a black and white photograph featuring a man in a low-angle shot. He appears to be in a state of exhaustion or pain, with his head bowed and his mouth open as if he is gasping or shouting. The man is wearing a t-shirt and has a visible tattoo on his left arm. The background is out of focus, but it seems to be an indoor setting, possibly a gym or sports facility, with a concrete floor and a wall that has a pattern. Overlaying the image is a text that reads "It's Hard? Good." The text is in a bold, sans-serif font and is positioned in the center of the image, slightly to the right. The style of the image is dramatic and seems to convey a message about the challenges faced in life or sports. The monochrome color scheme adds a dramatic effect to the image.

I believe this practice is something that locks in a huge portion of the saved into a higher vibration and it's basically esoteric supercharging that people who don't do it miss out on. It sets you up vibrationally for the entire year to fast and pray before the end of winter. So while some might say "oh it's just because a pagan holiday was adopted which happens around the other pagan holiday that became easter" or whatever, my answer to that is; GOOD. Sign me up.

The image displays a text document with a dark background and white text. The document appears to be a part of a larger document, possibly a book or a research paper, as indicated by the presence of multiple references and citations. The text is written in English and is formatted in a standard academic style, with paragraphs and indented lines.

The document contains a series of numbered paragraphs, which are likely part of a larger discussion or argument. The numbering suggests that the text is organized in a logical sequence, likely following a logical flow of thought or a logical argument.

The text is dense with information, and the content seems to be discussing a topic related to the field of philosophy or a similar discipline. The references to other works, such as "Bertrand Russell," "Bertrand Russell," and "Bertrand Russell," indicate that the text is likely discussing philosophical concepts or theories.

The text is not fully visible in the image, but the visible parts show a discussion of ideas and concepts, with references to other works and arguments. The text is dense and includes complex sentences and phrases, which suggests that the document is a scholarly or academic work.

The image does not provide any additional context or information beyond the visible text, so it is not possible to determine the exact topic or the author's intent from the image alone. The image only shows the text and does not provide any visual clues about the content or the context of the discussion.

Jesus Christ is God in the flesh. He died on the cross as a sinless sacrifice for all the sins of the whole world to save you from eternal hell, the punishment for your sins. He was buried, then rose again from the dead. One day you will stand before Him, and He will judge you. You can either repent to God by receiving Him and be saved, or reject Him and go to hell for your sins.

Rom. 3:23-25: "For all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God; Being justified freely by his grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus: Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness for the remission of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God;"

1 John 5:7: "For there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost: and these three are one."

Salvation is by grace through faith (Eph. 2:8-9, given by God, Romans 10:8 & 17) only in the one, final, effectual sacrifice of the Lord Jesus Christ (Heb. 10:8-12) dying in your place (1 Cor. 15:3-4) as a substitutionary offering for sin (Rom. 5:1-10). His blood atonement made for you is finished, so if you have received the Lord Jesus by faith (John 1:12) in your heart, you're forgiven of all your sins and are saved, once for all; finally and forever! (Rom. 8:38-39, Romans 4:5)

The gift of salvation can't be earned, it's a gift: Eph. 2:8-9: "For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: Not of works, lest any man should boast."

Rom. 10:9: "That if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved." Confess The Lord and Savior Jesus Christ in prayer, that you trust in Him, not your own works. He atoned for your sins on the cross.

I spent much of the best years of my life trying to follow, and believe, and understand Christ and Christianity. I could never fully do any of it. After a lifetime of study and contemplation, I have reached a conclusion similar to the thesis advanced by David Skrbina in The Jesus Hoax. A historical Jesus likely existed but Christianity/Christ as God made flesh was wholly constructed by Jews for the purpose of subverting and ultimately destroying the Roman empire, and assisting the establishment of a Jewish ruled world. I feel nothing but pity and revulsion for weak minded Christian goy slaves.

ViewReplyOriginalReport

Sanatana Dharma means Eternal Religion. Christianity, and every "teaching" therein, is like 2k years old.

Hinduism is the only religion that is truly, truly "non-local" (endures throughout all of time and is applicable anywhere in the cosmos's. Even extraterrestrials (can) practice it). Every other religion on this shithole planet is "localized" (has a starting point, applies only to human beings, etc.)

Yeshu is the greatest, greatest scumbag for concocting a literal artificial religion that has brought nothing but sorrow to this world. Does yeshuanity even talk about consciousness? Nope.

Don't even get me started on Abrahamism as a whole. Kabbalah? Even a weak deva aligned to darma can send all the malakim of the sephirot to hell (a real hell, not that gehenna swimming pool), and then the book about it would be called "sefer rot in hell"

Yeshu = Meshuga!!!

Harvester is a documentery|Programming to kill/be evil Migga Biscuit !!wIF6T/CyU+q

The Harvester VR sim is basically a MKUltra computer program used to brainwash, well more so mindrape, people into becoming evil/serial killers.

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Harvester_\(video_game\))

Sounds like this is 'predictive' programming(fittingly enough) or 'truth in fiction, lies in the news'.

In fact the man who played the MC(not the voice) was busted with CP multiple times and the publisher(IIRC) has ties with Epstein. Maybe the dude was MKed in a sim.

Is this type of Satanic, mindraping simulation real? Are we/I in one right now? Any real stories you know of?

Thanks in advance as always!

The image depicts a room that appears to be a virtual or digital representation of a living space. The walls are painted in a muted blue color, and the ceiling has a textured, uneven appearance. There are several objects scattered throughout the room, including a bed with a pink blanket, a wooden table, and a chair. The floor is covered in red carpet, and there are several objects on the floor, such as a small toy and a pair of shoes.

In the center of the room, there is a person standing, facing away from the camera. They are wearing a checkered shirt and jeans. The person's back is turned to the viewer, and they are facing a large screen mounted on the wall. The screen displays a red-tinted image of a person's face with blood splatters, suggesting a violent or disturbing scene. The room is illuminated by several light fixtures hanging from the ceiling, casting a soft glow on the scene. In the bottom right corner of the image, there is a watermark that reads "Frankie the sex toy." The watermark is in white text on a black background. The overall style of the image is realistic with a focus on the interior design and the presence of a person in a room with a violent scene on the screen.

The image depicts a scene from a video game or virtual environment. In the foreground, a character is seated in a chair facing a large, illuminated screen. The screen displays a geometric pattern with alternating bands of yellow and orange, creating a visually striking effect. The character appears to be in a state of contemplation or focus, with their head slightly tilted to the side.

The setting is a dimly lit room with a high ceiling and a large, circular window that allows natural light to filter in. The walls are dark, and there are several speakers and a desk with a computer monitor visible in the background. The overall atmosphere of the room suggests a professional or formal setting, possibly a control room or a meeting room.

The lighting and the character's posture indicate a moment of pause or reflection. There are no discernible texts or logos in the image.

Harvester is a 1996 point-and-click adventure game written and directed by Gilbert P. Austin and developed by DigiFX Interactive. Players take on the role of Steve Mason, an 18-year-old man who awakens in the fictional Texas town of Harvest in 1953, with amnesia. Over the next week, he is coerced or manipulated into performing a series of tasks with increasingly violent consequences at the behest of The Order of the Harvest Moon, a cult-like organization which seems to dominate the town and which promises to reveal the truth about Steve and how he found himself in Harvest.

Harvester was released on DOS, Microsoft Windows, and Linux in North America on September 24, 1996. The game is known for its violent content and its meta-commentary examination of violence, and has garnered a cult following.[2]

Gameplay

The game utilizes a point and click interface. Players must visit various locations within the game's fictional town of Harvest via an overhead map. By speaking to various townspeople and clicking on special "hotspots", players can learn information and collect items that progress the game's story and play. Harvester also features a fighting system where players can attack other characters by selecting a weapon and then clicking on the target. Both the target and the player's character have a limited amount of health available, allowing for either the player or the target to die. Players can choose to progress through the game by solving puzzles or by killing non-playable characters.

Plot

Teenager Steve Mason awakens in the small Texas farming town of Harvest in the year 1953, with no memories of his past or who he is. Exploring his home, he discovers that he does not recognize his mother or younger brother, both of whom act strangely—his mother compulsively bakes cookies for a charity event a week away, causing her to throw out each subsequent batch; and his brother obsessively watches an ultra-violent cowboy show that is the only program broadcast on Harvest televisions.

Exploring the town, Steve discovers Harvest is populated by hostile, strange individuals whom he likens to facsimiles or parodies of real people. Steve learns that no one believes him to genuinely be amnesiac, with every citizen he meets responding to his pleas for help with the canned response "You always were a kidder, Steve." Everyone in town encourages Steve to join the Lodge, a large building (reminiscent of the Hagia Sophia) located at the center of town that serves as the headquarters of the Order of the Harvest Moon, which is the sociopolitical center of life in Harvest and whose members act instead of a mayor or city council.

Learning that he is set to be married in two weeks, Steve goes to meet his fiancée, Stephanie Pottsdam, the daughter of Mr. Pottsdam, an unemployed man who hopes to get a job alongside Steve's father working in Harvest's meat packing plant and who spies on his daughter via a peephole in her bedroom wall. Meeting Stephanie, Steve finds that she, too, has amnesia, and woke up the same morning as him with no idea of how she got to Harvest. The two form an alliance to figure out their past and escape the town.

Steve visits the Sergeant at Arms at the Lodge, who tells him that all of his questions will be answered inside the building, and sets about giving him a series of tasks that serve as initiation rites. Over the next week, Steve is given a new "task" each day, beginning with petty acts of vandalism that escalate to theft and arson, with each task having unforeseen, tragic circumstances that result in someone's accidental death, murder, or suicide. Meanwhile, driven by their mutual fear and reliance on one another, Steve and Stephanie may become lovers.

On the final day of his initiation, Steve discovers a mutilated skull and spinal cord in Stephanie's bed, which the Sergeant at Arms tells him is his invitation to the Lodge. Venturing inside, Steve discovers that the Lodge is composed of a series of rooms called "Temples" which serve as mordant burlesques of real civic locations (including a room with a dead family and a kitchen where a chef prepares human meat) and whose inhabitants challenge him with a series of puzzles meant to teach lessons integral to understanding the precepts of the lodge. Each "lesson" turns out to be an inversion of traditional morality, including the futility of charity, the uselessness of the elderly, and the benefits of lust and vanity.

At the highest level of the Lodge, the sergeant at arms presents a still-living Stephanie and explains that Harvest is an elaborate virtual reality simulator being operated by a group of scientists to determine if it is possible to turn average humans into serial killers. Steve and Stephanie are the only real people in the simulation, and everything Steve has experienced has been intended to warp his reality and break down his inhibitions to prepare him for life as a serial killer. The sergeant offers him two options: murder Stephanie, committing his first real crime and accepting a future as a murderer; or refuse, in which case the scientists will render both Steve and Stephanie brain dead in the laboratory. Should Steve choose the second option, the sergeant informs him that he and Stephanie will experience an entire lifetime of happiness in the Harvest simulator in the seconds before they die in the real world.

If the player chooses to kill Stephanie, Steve bludgeons Stephanie to death and removes her skull and spinal cord. After the murder is complete, Steve awakens in the laboratory and gleefully informs the scientists that he enjoyed the experience. Hitchhiking home, he murders the driver who picks him up. Later, while he plays a violent video game in his bedroom, Steve's mother chastises him for doing so, as it will induce violent impulses in him. Steve laughs as the camera enters his throat and stomach, revealing the dissolving body parts of the driver he killed earlier.

If the player chooses to spare Stephanie, the sergeant at arms performs an impromptu wedding in the chapel before letting the pair go. Steve and Stephanie buy a home, have a child, and grow old together before dying peacefully and being buried in the Harvest cemetery. In real life, the scientists express disappointment at the results of their experiment as they look on at the pair's dead bodies.

Development and controversy

Harvester was developed by FutureVision (renamed DigiFX by the time of the game's release). Writer-director Gilbert P. Austin recounted:

My feeling was that FutureVision, being a small company, would need something "high concept" to compete with the industry giants of the time, and I argued that Harvester was exactly that idea. It was really the only idea that I pitched. I remember that it came to me in a flash. That's how I get a lot of my ideas, in creative rushes where I can barely write fast enough to get it all down. [...] The concept of Harvester, the idea that at the end of the game I wanted the player to mull over whether he had internalized the over-the-top violence and surreal imagery of the game in the same manner that Steve had, and the primary ending... all this was in the initial concept that I jotted down in one of those small reporter spiral notepads in about 30 minutes. That's what I pitched to FutureVision, and they bought it.[3]

Harvester was announced at the Consumer Electronics Show (CES) in January 1994 in Las Vegas.[3] The game had a budget of $1 million.[4] The video footage was filmed in the back warehouse of publisher Merit Software.[3] Though he was only contracted as the game's writer, Austin voluntarily directed the filming to ensure it stayed true to his vision for the game.[3] Austin finished the creative work in Autumn 1994 and moved on to other projects, leaving producer Lee Jacobson in sole charge of the remaining development.[3] The game was set to be released the same year, but the programming took two years to finish, and it became a commercial failure.[3]

In a December 1996 press conference, family psychologist David Walsh released a list of excessively violent games. Jacobson publicly demanded that Harvester, which was not included in Walsh's list, be added to it.[5] Gaming journalist Christian Svensson described Jacobson's actions as "shameless", and did not refer to Jacobson, DigiFX, or Harvester by name so as not to provide positive reinforcement for publicity seeking.[6]

In Germany, the game was banned.[7]

The game was designed by DigiFX Interactive and published by Merit Studios in 1996. [8] On March 6, 2014, Lee Jacobson re-released it on GOG.com,[9] for PC and Mac. On April 4, 2014, Nightdive Studios re-released it on Steam for PC and Linux.[10]

Harvester received "mixed or average" reviews, according to review aggregator Metacritic.[11] PC Gamer gave Harvester a positive review upon its initial release,[15] but panned it in a 2011 review where they called it the "goriest, most confusing, and above all stupidest horror game ever." [17] Allgame remarked that the game's delayed release negatively impacted its reception, as the game felt dated when it was finally released. They felt that this was indicative of the game as a whole, as "conversations with characters are frustrating and often make little sense, plus the manner in which the plot develops is disappointing. [...] there are things that are never explained, and the final third of the game is dull and pointless." [13] GameSpot's review was mixed, as they felt that there was "nothing actually revolutionary going on in Harvester" but praised the game's full-motion video segments as "truly disturbing" and commented that it had "tried-and-true adventure mechanics with entertaining twists". [14] Entertainment Weekly's Bob Strauss commented that "this gratuitously violent game doesn't make much sense, but it is a lot of twisted fun." [16]

In 2018, Daniel Kurland of Bloody Disgusting published a retrospective review of the game, in which he wrote: "Harvester is so over the top in its violence, sex, and taboo impulses that it almost initially feels like a joke. Harvester proudly embraces the fact that it's one of the most preachy, nihilistic games that you'll ever come across and that it pushes an extremely heavy-handed narrative that acts as if this game has the ability to change the future of gaming and singlehandedly 'solve the problem' of video game violence. [...] However, it's this weird mash-up of tones, sensibilities, and the game's reception that result in it turning into such an interesting, controversial title that's still in discussion today." [18]

The game has been compared to the works of filmmaker David Lynch,[19] including the film Blue Velvet[16] and the television series Twin Peaks.[17][18]

The image is a digital graphic with a black background and a white border. At the top, there is a circular logo with the text "Ancient Whispers" in white font. Below the logo, the main title "The Imperial Treasury of Vienna Confirms A Demon Was Trapped in Glass During A 17th Century Exorcism in Germany" is displayed in large, bold, white font. The text is centered and appears to be the main focus of the image.

In the lower part of the image, there is a silhouette of a person standing inside a glass container. The person is holding a staff and appears to be in a dynamic pose, as if they are in motion. The glass container is transparent, allowing the person to be seen clearly.

The overall style of the image is informative and appears to be a promotional or informational graphic, likely used for a book or article. The text and the silhouette of the person inside the glass container are the primary elements, with the logo and the title providing context to the content. The use of a black background and white text creates a stark contrast, making the text and the silhouette stand out clearly.

The image is a split-screen photograph with two distinct sections. On the left side, there is a close-up of a hand holding a small, rectangular bottle with a label that reads "NTPT" and "100% natural." The bottle has a white label with black text. The background of the image is blurred, but it appears to be a room with a patterned fabric, possibly a bedspread or a tablecloth.

On the right side of the image, there is a sketch of a person lying on a bed with their arms raised, as if they are in the middle of a gesture or action. The person is depicted with long hair and is wearing a nightgown. The sketch is in a sketchy, informal style, with loose lines and a lack of detail.

The overall style of the image is a blend of the real-life photograph and a sketch, with the photograph providing a clear view of the product and the sketch adding a creative element to the image. The split-screen format allows for a comparison between the two elements, with the photograph providing a more detailed view of the product and the sketch adding a more artistic touch.

I would suggest 5-htp to communicate with "demons" but since you're going in a curiosity of mine for violence sake I would suggest you don't go harming entities you have yet identified. But if a person doesn't believe them I implore one to try it.

Most of what a person does is "Shadow work" where you try to pacify the subconscious mind to behavioral deficits like aggression or depression.

Marijuana makes it so you can't "visit" them in their dimension through hallucinatory power. So abstain from pot if you want a parasomnia demon to visit you.

Need to be a higher powered soul to destroy a demon . . . Humans and demons have basically the same power in their souls . . . Your equal to any demon . . . In potential spiritual power . . . Their just older and thus more skilled . . . But they aren't really stronger than humans spiritually

You can only trap them . . . You need something like an arch magi or an angel or demi-god like Michael to kill them, it's beyond human capacity. . .

The image is a collage of newspaper clippings from The New York Times, with the newspaper's title prominently displayed at the top. The clippings are arranged in a grid format, with each piece of text in a different color, making it easy to distinguish between them. The clippings are from different sections of the newspaper, such as "Holocaust," "Jews," "New York Times," "All Long Before W.W.2 had Finished," and "Killing Fields." The text in the clippings is in English and includes headlines, articles, and paragraphs. The headlines are bold and stand out, while the articles and paragraphs are written in a more subdued font. The dates and times of the events are also visible, providing a temporal context to the stories.

The style of the image is straightforward and informative, with a focus on providing a snapshot of the newspaper's coverage of significant events and issues during the time period of the Holocaust and the early years of the United States. The use of different colors for the clippings helps to distinguish between different sections of the newspaper and to highlight specific events or articles.

Have you ever voted for the Trump administration?

If your answers to any of these questions are "yes", then odds are very much that you are possessed by the demons. Demonic possession / oppression is fucking rampant in the west to the point where it's been culturally normalized, and we don't even notice it anymore.

In this case, you need to work on yourself, first. You need to get them out of you. You need to learn to feel compassion, instead of hate. You need to develop self-awareness.

As for how to do that...Judaism. Be involved with the Jewish religion. The Jewish religion will protect you from demons. The Jewish religion is the one which has all of the magic and power.

Ars Goetia, Pseudomonarchia Daemonum, Liber incantationum, Compendium Maleficarum.

Hunting demons is hard business, even more so these days. People invite them in knowingly and willing to sacrifice you, your work, and others for very little gain. Many will scoff at you, it's not a discipline of pride or glory. Possession is far uglier than I care to describe and if it is not dealt with you will need to perform a cull, the parks are best for this. Truly demonic entities are far more evil than you could possibly imagine. Hating humanity with absolute vitriol and actively move with the intention to make every human being suffer. The worst are the ones fully integrated into human skin and society, trying to influence future events for their best outcome.

Learn the personalities first, how they operate and how they influence. This is so you are not being manipulated into creating cracks in the wall. Learn to protect second.

Fundamentals need to be solid.

After that if you are serious, start hunting. Start with information from the church or masjids. good luck, God bless. we are all here for a divine purpose, do not let anything tell you otherwise.

>Is it impossible?

Killing? Allegedly, no. Trapping? Allegedly, yes.

From what I recall, incantation bowls are an ancient method of distracting a demon and trapping them within, to keep them from coming after a person.

Solomon was said to trap demons into a brass vessel, and this tale is followed by other such legends, notably the genies bound to lamps or trapped in bottles, either granting wishes to those who free them... or giving them the option of how they want to be killed. But I guess you'd have to get into the Solomonic tradition for further info on that.

One may also argue the dybbuk box is another sort of trap, but it's a fictional art piece, and dybbuks are not demons but spirits of the dead who kind of... "ride" a person until their unfinished business is fulfilled. Broken lore there, but the notion of a box, perhaps with mirrors and methods for trapping it, intrigues me.

I could have sworn I'd seen something about laying ghosts by trapping them in bottles, but I can't make any claims to the veracity of that practice either.

I guess I have some more reading to do. I've only read two of them, and own one of those (Pseudomonarchia is a bit tongue-in-cheek). Might have the others in an ebook format, but I can look anyway. Any thoughts on the Rituale Romanum for exorcism purposes? Kind of tough for me as a non-Christian, but options be options.

The image is a digital illustration featuring two characters, one green and one blue, standing on a dark, possibly nighttime, street. The green character is holding a book with a red cover, which has a white label with text that is not clearly legible. The blue character is seated on a wooden bench, wearing a blue shirt and brown pants. The background is dark, with a fence and some foliage visible. The style of the image is cartoonish, with a focus on the characters and their expressions. There are no visible texts within the image.

If you seek the chamber behind the curtain, do it as a steward, not as a sacrifice.

Sit upright. Feet on the ground. Name the room. Count from one to twelve and back to one. Invite a single figure to speak. Ask its function. Ask its age. Ask what it protects. Write the answers by hand. When finished, dismiss it formally. Close the session. Wash your hands in cold water. This seals the rite.

If any voice demands control, do not grant it. Sovereignty is the anchor of the house. In old contracts, consent binds deeper than iron.

Behind the stage there are corridors, yes. Some are storage. Some are rehearsal. None require you to surrender the keys.

Keep the lights lit while you look for the dark.

Behind the kneeling figure, there is an angel with a halo and wings, holding a staff. The angel is wearing a red cloak with gold trim and a gold crown. The angel's posture is upright, and it is looking towards the kneeling figure.

The background of the painting is rich with detailed architectural elements, including a large archway with a golden dome and a window with a stained glass design. The overall color palette is warm, with a dominant use of gold and red. The painting style is realistic with attention to detail, and it is executed in the Northern Renaissance style, which is characterized by its emphasis on realism and the use of naturalistic light and shadow.

When you feel the need for masturbation, notice the cue, observe it. Keep observing it and ask yourself questions about it "where did this come from?", "did this just appear into consciousness?".

Treating the cue as something some kind of enemy put into your consciousness may also help; in this case, you can say "Ahaa, gotcha".

This all will help your PFC take control and build an autonomous mechanism to resist the urge.

This also works with hunger and any kind of urge.

I strongly recommend looking into deliverance ministries and people like Isaiaah Saldivar and that group. They hate lukewarm Christianity and are big on deliverence from demonic oppression. The church is full of people who live in sexual sin and think continually praying for forgiveness while afflicted is the answer. It's not.

Addiction to masturbation is not just some mental willpower thing. You get infected from traumas and demonic trespasses and continually re-open a spiritual door from which you will continue to be influenced. This can happen from substance abuse as well, like drinking alcohol or getting stoned "once in a while" and leaving the door wide open to the spirits who need you to spill your life force for them.

Just like they create crime dramas on television which are overtly fake, then put out polished "true crime" (also fake), and finally the raw front lines "body cam footage" (also often fake and scripted).... video games serve the same purpose in early development. Children are given fake entities to interact with so that they look at the entities in real life, as real. If for no other reason than reality by comparison, ie reality as a matter of degree rather than via any sort of absolute.

Television itself serves the same purpose. It's to bolster the quite literally untestable notion of object permanence. It shows you images of things happening when you are not around. And likewise shows will depict scenarios about after characters close the door and go back to their lives. It basically seems to exist just to give the mind more material to confabulate narratives around the idea that everyone everywhere are all doing something without you all the time. When that cannot be proven, nor even tested. It can only be taken on faith. The mind and the senses cannot be used to prove themselves nor each other, and likewise memory itself. So television shows serve a sort of modeling process in early development, both to program in the idea of what a "baseline" person is when no one is around, and to reinforce the idea that they exist after leaving your conscious frame at all.

Also the veil is aware of when you're looking at it, and what's behind it, rather than the mirages it creates. And will try to make you stop.

What does it mean for something to be fake? People on this board throw this word around a lot in ways that defy reason. For stuff like news footage the distinction is pretty clear, but people also apply it to world events and people all the time. When you say that people are "fake" what do you mean by that?

There isn't a single way to say it. If you're playing a video game then so far as your physical body, your movement and experiences in that environment are fake. Not real. Even if the experiences are saved, or if other minds shared it, they still aren't real relative to your physical body. You used something else to do it, you could say you sent something else.

If all of reality is fake and modified or generated in realtime, then being fake is more about cause and effect. There are no physical laws and the thing creating reality is just playing along with you and doing what you expect, it's pretending.

Now you could try to be clever and split hairs, saying then the nature of the generating system (the mind of God) is the only reality. Or that your sleeping body is the only truth. But it's pointless, because anything you can come up with within this mirror cube reality prison you can also assert the counter case. And it will play along with you.

The light and sound my device produces are real. The emotions I feel are real, as are the reflexes and habits I create. You're right the Zelda isn't real in the same way as George Bush but this still isn't a binary all-or-nothing distinction.

>If all of reality is fake and modified or generated in realtime, then being fake is more about cause and effect. There are no physical laws and the thing creating reality is just playing along with you and doing what you expect, it's pretending.

This is where the distinction breaks down. The existence of shadowy puppetmasters behind the scenes doesn't mean that physical laws are any less consistent or applicable in most cases. Just because a prison was built by people with deliberate intent does not make the actual building "fake" or give you some kind of ability to ignore it.

>Now you could try to be clever and split hairs, saying then the nature of the generating system (the mind of God) is the only reality. Or that your sleeping body is the only truth. But it's pointless, because anything you can come up with within this mirror cube reality prison you can also assert the counter case. And it will play along with you.

So then why bother calling it fake? There are better words, like subjective or perceptual or simulated, all of which better describe what you're trying to say than "fake." You like "fake" because it creates powerful emotions without you needing to say anything of substance that merits them. In essence, your rhetoric is fake.

>Words like "perceptual" are vague and don't capture that both sensory reality and the mind itself can be partially or totally simulated.

That's literally what "perceptual reality" means. You perceive reality without any way of independently verifying it.

>Simulated is a totally loaded term.

So is fake.

>If something drives you into a hyypnotic state and then tells you what to dream, is that reality or simualtion?

That depends entirely on my relationship to "external" reality. If there's nothing I can do to independently verify that external reality, the simulation may as well be reality as far as I'm concerned. Otherwise, you can do this all day - anything you claim is real, I can just assert without evidence is "fake" and hiding the "true" reality.

>Why would I default to such a laoded term?

That's the question I'm asking you. I don't claim to be a mind reader.

>What you just said is fucking stupid and I already addressed it all.

You didn't address anything. If you did, direct me to the specific post.

I've never seen this dude and his "chispology" being discussed/mentioned here in all the years i've been around (i could be wrong though).

<https://chisper256891285.wordpress.com/2021/02/20/chispology/>

He's a dude who travels around the world trying to piece together the "true history". Comes off as kind of a well written, coherent "schizo", so i thought it would be right up /x/'s alley with the topics he covers.

It's all in chronological order to the left, some of what he's discovered includes things like the Tower of Babel being real and actually being a "language academy" by jews, and for jews. It had the purpose of serving as a support institution to improve the "jewish merchant guild" and help it expand around the world. How they were referred to as "the hyksos", the people settled in Avaris (funny), the capital of Egypt. Or how they took over Egypt by deliberately provoking food shortages, hoarding and hiding food underground and then presenting it to the rulers when they were desperate, gaining their favor that way. Or how they've been obsessed with a prophecy that prompts them to hoard gold for millennia.

He also talks about a myriad of other discoveries, like Jesus being revered in a tibetan buddhist temple where he allegedly taught students and they still preserve physical scriptures written by him. Talks too about giants..etc, the whole /x/ shebang.

It's a hefty read, i haven't read through it all myself. I AM NOT this dude (spare me the get an ad messages), this was sent to me by a friend a few days ago and i've been eyeing it. Another point i wanna make clear, this dude isn't an antisemitic chud blogger, all i've read so far is presented with a neutral, investigative view and with back up to his claims.

Some men, from want of instruction, believe all the current narratives, while others,

Palaephatus

These are the historical observations, methodical inquiries & pendragon calculations made by Damian Beeson Bullen of Burnley. My task has been one of the mightiest of challenges; the extreme scarcity of evidence left to us by the deep past is by far the largest bar to ascertaining a proper historical truth. Equally as counter-productive is the prevalent tendency among modern scholars to treat ancient reports with suspicion, to disrespect venerable writers as mere myth-makers; corrupt & devious Machiavellians with hidden agendas, especially when some nugget crops up which runs against the grain of their long-wrought, personal theories. Despite this state of affairs, I am rather of the opinion that we broad-minded moderns must respect everything that we are given as we say, 'this is what we have got, this is what has been left to us,' and construct our histories according to the evidence.

The scattered shrapnel of sources which have survived to the modern day originate in the minds of intelligent people, the intellectual elite of an age. We must remember each of these clue-givers represents the tip of an iceberg, for beneath the surface these scholars would have conducted their own research into the matter from accounts long lost & forgotten. Not a few of these ice-berg tips have reached modernity, but they are still a scanty sample, leaving great gaps in the historical canvas like spaces in an extremely difficult suduko square.

The fabric that is the multi-hued tapestry of history contains holes which have been darned only by the imaginations of historians. They will often use the same methods that paleontologists use when reconstructing an extinct animal entire from a single bone, or when archaeologists conjure civilizations from half a broken pot! In many cases these 'solutions' have left numerous loose threads dangling, when tugging upon one with any weight of serious thought unravels the entire needlework completely.

On first coming to my studies, I soon discovered that certain sections of historical research were actually in a state of chronic disarray; whether down to this defective academic needlework, or more likely an error in factual recognizance made by our earliest historians. Mistakes of the latter sort would then be perpetuated by centuries of scholars & scribes who, not knowing the material they were using was corrupt, maintained such errors as truth. Only by a painstaking examination of all the clues possible may we at some point discover if what we are reading is the actual truth, or is only a mere factoid; that is to say a fact-shaped falsity that has become generally believed. It has been my delight & my duty to detect & to correct as many of these factoids as I could find, utilizing a new investigative process known as Chispology.

What the modern sciences of forensics & ballistics are to criminal justice, so Chispology is the new tool in which to unearth, to identify, to understand & to assemble the evidence left to us by posterity. Like a microscope scouring the vast metaverses of history, Chispology helps us hone in on emerging themes, helps us deviate from false narratives & helps us to take things at prima facie, free from the obscuring mists of time & happenstance.

When looking at any piece of history, there are five separate forces which may affect an event. The first is its Realization, that is to say the moment or moments when an event occurred. The second is its Remembrance, whether contained in the memories of witnesses, or a more tactile entity such as the bullet-holes in the brickwork of Budapest, pommeled into the masonry during the Hungarian rising of 1956. The third force to effect historical events is their Recording, the moment when they are stored for posterity by some enduring medium such as the printed page or via its modern-day version, the website. From here the information diverges, whether in an act of Reproduction – i.e. copying the story with varying degrees of accuracy – or Regurgitation, a retelling, a remoulding, a refashioning of the tale.

Between an event's Realization and its Recording, a great many factors may affect its remembrance, which inevitably results in a distortion of the truth. Over passages of time, people are prone to forget the facts of a matter, or perhaps be influenced by personal bias when it comes to the retelling. 'History is written by the victors,' piped Winston Churchill, and after winning the Second World War it was his 6-volume epic on the affair which became the seminal touchstone for all future students of the war. As time spins on further from an event's realization, especially those of hundreds – if not thousands – of years ago, items of remembrance become rarer & rarer, opening themselves up to such misinterpretations that one false academic assumption can send scholars spinning off into barren cul-de-sacs for centuries.

These alterations in remembrance occur under the auspices of what I have labelled the 'Chisper Effect,' named after the children's parlor game, Chinese Whispers, in which a bunch of noisy kids with chocolate smudged-faces gather together in a circle. A single sentence whispered ear-to-ear, and by the time that string of words has traveled the circuit it has almost inevitably been altered in sound & sense. In the same fashion, an alteration of sound and sense has affected a lot of our historical information. In this day and age, the era of mass communication, a piece of writing can be sent to billions right across the world without it changing one iota. Things were very, very different in the past, however; until the advent of printing in the 15th century names, places, dates etc. were oftentimes corrupted through transmission, whether orally or through the scribal transliteration of texts.

Where Sir Frederick Kenyon writes, 'the human hand and brain have not yet been created which would copy the whole of a long work absolutely without error,' the Roman poet Martial, infuriated by this lack of accuracy, complained, 'if any poems... seem to you either too obscure or not quite good Latin, not mine is the mistake: the copyist spoiled them in his haste to complete for you his tale of verses.' As centuries pass, and new alterations are bolted onto the old, the original names and bona fide facts became ever more obscured in the mists of history. Modern academia is faced with this annoyingly messy morass of information, a jiggedy jumble which has baffled the best of brains, but once we begin to understand the processes of the Chisper Effect, we may begin to make sense of that maddening jumble. If history is a kaleidoscopic patchwork of confused accounts, then Chispology is the lens that coalesces the evidence into a cohesive & logical depiction.

I have called an identifiable occasion of alteration in an act of historical remembrance a Chisper, of which there are three principle forms, or Transchispers. Of these, the Philochisp is a subtle phonetical variation that is obtained through the transmission of a word or phrase. The Factochisp is a distortion of an event's 'realisation' into something different to that which occurred. The Creochisp is an embellishment of an event, its regurgitation, a milder form of distortion that has been influenced by the original, but takes on a whole new spirit of its own. The more mouths & minds through which information passes, the more open to corruption becomes the truth. These moments of alteration can be strung together into 'chains' known as Philochains, Creochains and Factochains, which may then intertwine like an infuriating jumble of thick wooly thread call'd a CHISPERBALL. Here follow two examples, both of which spring from the same event, being: John stole five hundred turkeys from the market.

Philochain

John stole five hundred turkeys from the market.

Jane stole five hundred turkeys from the market.

Jane stole five hungry turkeys from the market.

Factochain

John stole five hundred turkeys from the market.

John bought five hundred turkeys from the market.

John bought five hundred turkeys from the farm.

The two sentences, 'John bought five hundred turkeys from the farm,' & 'Jane stole five hungry turkeys from the market,' seem the record of quite different events. But we in the know understand they are both errant remembrances of a singular happening. It is the Chispologist's task to unravel these chispers, as if they were following a piece of thread through a maze to the pointed rock on which the ball of yarn was caught. When analyzing such tangles, the good student will learn to think outside the box, acquiring an instinctual feel for the similarities between Jane's stealing of five turkeys & John's buying of five hundred turkeys, then enable themselves with the tools which shall aid them in investigating & identifying the chispers which shall lead them back to their common source of realisation, tracing the changing phases of fact and phrase from origin to reception. The Chispologist must ask why is the information different, where are the points of diversion, and what happened to the separated strands in the meantime.

Of the three species of chisper, when it comes to historical investigations the Philochisp is the most prominent. These may be easily observable, as when the English Peter becomes the Dutch Pieter; the Albanian Petro, the Indonesian Petrus & the Spanish Pedro. Note how, in the Spanish version, the letter 't' has been changed to a 'd,' while the -er ending has become -ro. A copyist's error here may lead to something like 'Badro' & we are presented with a name from which only faint hints of 'Peter' may be discerned. The student of Chispology must be aware of vast varieties in languages & dialects – some alive, some dead – through which a name may have traveled, before arriving on the page or screen before us. Most days of the week the English-speaking people's are faced with such transmission, for these twenty-four hour units of time are in fact named after the gods of the Anglo-Saxons. Tuesco's Day became Tuesday; Woden's Day became Wednesday; Thor's day became Thursday & Freia's Day became Friday.

Imagine an underground train travelling through Delhi during the Commonwealth Games of 2010. Three consecutive carriages are filled with the visiting natives of three separate countries – in the first are Mauris from New Zealand, in the second are Zulus from South Africa and in the third are Inuits from Canada. On to the train steps an itinerant singer from Rajasthan, whose sweet voice entertains the carriages to the accompaniment of a stringed sarangi. As he makes his way through the train collecting money, each set of visitors asks him his name. That night, during animated meal-time conversations, all three sets of visitors remember the singer's name, which has now been subtly changed through the lingual processes of each of their three languages, resulting in three different versions of the original. Twenty-five years later, at three separate reunion dinners, the Rajhastani singer is spoken of again, only this time no-one can quite remember what he was called. A name is mentioned, which the company agrees to along the lines of, 'yes that sounds right,' but of course it is not the same, and the name has changed yet again through the mnemonic processes of the Chisper Effect. By this point in the process, as it made its way through time and language, six different versions of the singer's name have developed out of the original,

When we place several philochisps together we construct what is known as a philochain. The links are made by philofortes & philopianos. The latter are pretty easy to see, such as the similarities between Bs & Ps. The former, the pianofortes, are less evident, such as Msd becoming Ds. Together they bind the philochain, an alternative name for which is the more poetic-sounding Babel-Chain, after the biblical Tower of Babel in which God divided the world's original language. Just as normal chains are only as strong as its weakest link, the Babel-Chain works best when each philochisp is supported by confirmable facts. Without the back-up of historical evidence, all we would possess is a simple list of phonetically interconnected names, & quite a good deal of historical research stands on such shaky ground. A good example of a well-supported babel-chain is found within the mythology of King Arthur, in which the name of his wife, Guinevere, appears with five variant spellings.

If you could spare a moment to say the following names out aloud, slowly and in sequence, you should be able to feel each philochisp as it occurs.

Gwenhwyfar
Guinevar
Guanora
Vanora Wander
Guinevereford

When comparing the names Gwenhwyfar and Wander, it would appear strange to suggest they were the same woman, but analyzing the sources shows both names have been ascribed to the legendary queen of King Arthur.

Three unbridled ravagings of the Isle of Britain: The first of them, when Medrawd came to Arthur's court in Celli Wig in Cornwall; he left neither food nor drink in the court he did not consume, and he also pulled Gwenhwyfar out of her chair of state
The Welsh Triads C.13th

On the following day, the British camp was ransacked. In it were discovered Arthur's consort Queen Guanora, and no few men and women of noble blood
Hector Boece C.16th

It is the scene of innumerable legends, which agree in representing it as the residence or prison of the infamous Vanora or Guinevar, who appears in the local traditions under the more homely appellation of Queen Wander, and is generally described as a malignant giantess
The New Statistical Account of Scotland 1845

As I proceed through my investigations, I hope to bring together more Gwenhwyfars and Wanders, interconnecting their variant names within webs of external evidence, & square by square fill up that historical suduko square. It is during my researches that I have been often startled by the latent powers of words, when even the smallest & most innocuous of place-names can be an eternal storehouses of so much history. To the budding Chispologist I say; take a walk in the countryside, note the names of the cloughs & the hills, & let us weave our histories, drawn from the phonetical landscape of our towns & their wonderful surrounds. In this next complex example, we will have to recognize not only philochisps, but factochips & creochisps also, all tangled together in their chisperballs. The case in question is the identity of the man behind the legend that is Robin Hood, the Lincoln Green wearing, bow-wielding outlaw of Sherwood Forest. We know he lived before 1377, when a mention of him appears in the poem Piers Ploughman by William Langland;

I can not parfitli mi paternoster, as the preist it singeth / But I can the ryms of Robin Hode, and Randolf Erl of Chester.

A 15th century Scottish historian called John of Fordun then gives 'Robin' a very solid date – that of 1265. He writes, 'In that year also [1265] the disinherited English barons and those loyal to the king clashed fiercely; amongst them Roger de Mortimer occupied the Welsh Marches and John-de-Eyville occupied the Isle of Ely; Robert Hood was an outlaw amongst the woodland briar's and thorns.'

Fordun's information is a regurgitated creochisp of the actual truth. As he researched the matter, he came across information that a certain Robert Hode was Robin Hood, & that his epithet or surname came from his place of residence, Hood or Hode Castle at Kilburn, North Yorkshire. On investigating further, John of Fordun must have discovered that the property had once been in the hands of the D'Eyville family, whose principle member was Sir John D'Eyville, the baron who 'occupied the Isle of Ely.' Sir John was a rebellious fellow who did fight alongside Simon de Montfort, & thus Fordun presumed that Robin Hood was Sir John D'Eyville of Hode Castle, & wrote his account accordingly. The reality is somewhat quite different, for it is in the person of Sir John's junior kinsman, Robert D'Eyville that we must identify the true Robin Hood.

The first concrete mention of Robin occurs in the margins of a Latin poem written down in 1304 by the Prior of Alnwick. The original text can be found in the first volume of Francis Peck's unpublished edition of the Monasticon, now in the British Museum, with the title of; 'Prioris Alnwickensis de hello Scotico upud Dumbarr, tempore regis Edwardi I. dictamen sive rithmus Latinus, quo de WILLIELMO WALLACE, Scotico illo ROBIN WHOOD, plura sed invidiose cani.' On this title we read how the great Scottish freedom fighter, William Wallace of Braveheart fame, is described as 'the Scottish Robin Hood.'

Being a contemporary of Wallace leads us to the Duchess of Cleveland's Battle Roll, where our suggested Robin, Robert D'Eyville, 'earned a fearsome reputation as a well-born miscreant,' alongside his brother Joseline. Together, these two brothers famously rampaged with some violence across the north of England, targeting travelers & religious houses. As they struck, they would use the same methodology as that executed by Robin Hood in the ballads which framed his legend. One raid in particular is especially resonant of the modus operandi of Robin; in order to rob the Bishop of Durham at Northallerton, Robert, Joseline & two hundred men dressed in the habit of friars.

We must also examine the Calendar of Patent Rolls for 1318, where on November 1st we are presented with a list of fifty or so adherents of Thomas Lovel of Skelton. Among the names we can very clearly identify two of Robin's main gang-members; William Scarlett & John de Methle. The latter man is recorded elsewhere in the same period as 'Liteljohn of Methley,' who was an archer captain in the retinue of the Earl of Lancaster.

That Robert D'Eyville of Hood, Will Scarlett & Little John were all active c.1320 puts them in the correct time period in which is set the earliest ballad concerning the legend – A Lytell Geste of Robyn Hode. The story shows Robin being vilified by an un-numbered King Edward, who was conducting a tour of the north of England in order to sort out the problem of the poaching of royal deer from a certain 'Plomton Park;'

All the passe of Lancasshyre
He went both ferre and nere
Tyll he came to Plomton Parke
He faylyd many of his dere

There our kynge was wont to se
Herdes many one
He coud unneth fynde one dere
That bare ony good horne

This back story fits with the neatliest of sweetness into that of King Edward II, who stayed at Ightenhill Manor in my home town of Burnley, Lancashire, between the 4th & the 13th of October, 1323. Between Burnley & the town of Rossendale there once stretched a great swathe of deer-dotted hunting ground through which the modern Woodplumpton Road winds today. I've walked it myself, a lovely country tonic to the vigours & rush of urban grittiness. From Woodplumpton we can notice the philochisp to Plomton, & that the Burnley area was Robin's stomping ground may also be seen in an enemy of his called Guy of Gisburne, who heralded from a town just a few miles to the north.

More support can be found again in the Geste, in a certain character called 'Richard at the Lee.' Hitherto this day he has remained unidentified by the most strenuous study, but if we dig a little deeper we come across a figure in history who fits the bill, the 14th century Richard de la Legh who married Cecily Towneley, of Towneley Hall, Burnley. He would not long after take her family name – & estate – becoming Richard Towneley, erasing his original name from all but the most obscure of records. I found the evidence one day while casually examining a great family tree in Towneley Hall itself, a spot of literary archeology which should help stabilise the true identity of Robin Hood.

In the Geste, we are also told that Richard possessed a castle at a place called called Verysdale, or Uterysdale. This would then connect to a name in a 1273 land grant which records land owned by Gilbert de la Legh – Richard's father – lying on both sides of the River Calder at Towneley called Weterode and Waderode. The 'dale' suffix would then be the open valley of 'weter,' giving us.

Chispology is the academic cloth that wipes away the dirt which accumulates over time, that cakes facts with a muggy untruths. In the Chisper Effect I showed how where the historian dismisses information as romancing or mythology, the Chispologist learns how to read outside of the box and recognize where the truths are in a tale. The beauty of Chispology is that it is always possible to find some kind of solution to a puzzle. Whether it is correct, of course, is down to the weight of evidence which transplants a theory from conjecture, thro' circumstantially proven to the realms of 'distinct possibility.'

The process is known as the Ladder of Possibility, of which there are four rungs. The first question the Chispologist must ask is if a hyperbasis is possible or not. For example, it is definitively impossible for Julius Ceasar to be Jack The Ripper. Once establishing a possibility, the Chispologist must then add their efforts to what is known as the Weight of Possibility. The more 'coincidences' one can unearth, the heavier becomes the weight, & the lower down the ladder we can go

Impossible Possible Plausible Probable

It is into the bedsoil of any chispological stiudy that one must be prepared to plant what is known as a HYPERBASIS. This is a statement of fact made with the best evidence available, spliced with a dash of creative understanding. Another weapon in Chispological Lexicon is the rather exotic looking, ANTHROTREE, which constitutes the main trunk of the ancient peoples, or tribe, we are discussing. Out of this entity shoot branches – & of course sub-branches – representing Culture, Theology, Linguistics, Archeology & Genetics. If any tree is living well & prospering with the vital energies of life, a rush of green foliage soon flows into & between the branches like tidal water into coastal rocks. In the same fashion, if the hyperbasis of AN anthrotree is correct, & the evidence which have created the branches infallible, then we should be able to find upon the tree certain corresponding literary legacies – ie leaves. Together they make up the foliage of an anthrotree

If we were able to plant the same species of anthrotree in a different places, & see it also bear healthy leafage & indisputable fruits, then surely the two trees will support each other intrinsically. This would just be like comparing the far-scattered members of the old British Empire who still play rugby & cricket, still worship Jesus, still speak the mother tongue. These are the branches of the British anthrotree.

Having elucidated some of the nuances of Chispology, I shall now make a small examination of some of the more famous mysteries of human history. As we go we shall find the true indenties of many major historical figures such as Joseph, Zeus, Menaleus, Aphrodite, Jesus & King Arthur, along with finding the true origins of the Holy Grail & the location of the Stone of Destiny. We'll also discover the location of several Dark Age battlefields on the island of Britain, & also where the aforementioned divine relics ended up. Hold onto your hats, for its time we entered the historical hurricane that is the Chisper Effect.

"The beauty of Chispology is that it is always possible to find some kind of solution to a puzzle. " — where there is no possibility of error there may be no likelihood of validity . . .

Agreed

A great many ideas are possible...

But then comes plausibility, then probability, etc its up to the Chispologist to move thro the levels, adding more & more to the weight of coincidence

center, resembling a symbol commonly associated with the Illuminati. The background is black, and there is a faint outline of a yellow starburst or sunburst above the frog's head. The character's mouth is open, and its eyes are wide, giving the impression of surprise or shock. The overall style of the image is cartoonish and expressive, with a focus on the character's facial expression.

Remember that it's just a way among many to intend, the sigil stuff. You won't do anything with straining yourself more. Try to do it again this time asserting the final state and giving it a week to seethe it out. You can also simply gaze at the sigil with a timer if you don't want to whack it, it still being just that: Intent, an act, and non attachment; once it's done just go on with your life, and give it at least three days.

Who is Nophono?

Nophono is a real person. He is a character and the subject of a well-known horror story spread online.

The story of Nophono originates from a series of posts on the imageboard 4chan, specifically on the /x/ board (which is dedicated to paranormal and creepy content). The original posts, made by an anonymous user, claimed to have found a strange, never-released VHS tape from the 1980s.

The core of the Nophono legend is this: the tape appears to be a low-budget, surreal children's show hosted by a terrifying, silent entity named Nophono. The show is bizarre and deeply unsettling, and the story claims that watching it has severe psychological effects, including paranoia, nightmares, and even physical illness.

What Does Nophono Look Like?

According to the story, Nophono's appearance is a key source of its horror. The description is intentionally vague but highly disturbing. Here are the common traits described:

The Shape: Nophono is described as a tall, lanky, humanoid figure. He is extremely thin and elongated.

The Face: This is the most horrifying part. He is said to have no facial features—no eyes, nose, or mouth. Just smooth, blank, flesh-colored skin where a face should be. This is a classic trait of many horror creatures (like the Slender Man or The Silence from Doctor Who) known as "blank face syndrome".

The Suit: He is almost always described as wearing a cheap, ill-fitting, garishly bright suit. The most common color mentioned is a vibrant, electric blue. The suit adds to the creepy, anachronistic feel, reminiscent of bad public access television.

The Behavior: He doesn't speak (hence the name "No-phono," meaning "no sound"). He just moves awkwardly and silently through a sparse, empty set, sometimes interacting with objects or puppets in a meaningless, repetitive way.

The image is a black and white photograph featuring a figure that appears to be a man, possibly a religious figure, given the crown of thorns on his head. He is holding a book in his right hand, which is open to a page with text. The text on the page reads, "A couple of cool stories about me by my wife." The man's expression is serious, and he is looking directly at the camera. The background is plain and does not provide any additional context. The style of the image is reminiscent of a religious or spiritual theme, with the figure's attire and the crown of thorns suggesting a religious or spiritual context.

To the /x/ natives who are confused, let me explain.

Nophono is a mysterious entity best known fan for caring fan about a lot of extremely obscure shit. Mentions of the entity first appeared in summer 2025 on /x/[1], where a gigachad was spotted reading a book titled shit nophono cares fan about. This event introduced the entity to the public eye and prompted an investigation into its identity. The gigachad was promptly taken into custody, but regrettably prior to his capture had eaten the book in its entirety. As of the time of writing this article, he refuses to comment on the book or to cooperate with the authorities.

Investigators are still working to figure out who Nophono is and why an entire book would be written about shit he cares fan about. Current theories indicate that Nophono is a faceless, extremely tall creature vaguely resembling a gigachad wearing a cheap bright blue suit. It has been spotted using long, shadowy tendrils as a means of attacking perceived threats (just like hecking slenderman). Nophono's lack of any facial attributes means the entity cannot speak, which is most likely where its name originates from (no-phono meaning no-sound). If it wasn't for this weakness, Nophono could perhaps be the only one that could win a debate against Warrior-Z.

It is suspected that Nophono gains in strength by consuming knowledge about shit nobody else cares fan about. The amount of strength gained is inversely proportional to the popularity of the information – for example, mainstream media is unlikely to yield it any substantial amount of power, whereas the various shit listed in this section below is most likely Nophono's primary source.

Current protocols aim at preventing the spread of panic by publicly framing Nophono's name as a term used to describe shit nobody cares about. In addition, recent strategies have involved replacing mentions of shit that nophono could find worth caring fan about with shit many other people care fan about, which would render the information about them useless to the entity. However, several worrying reports have emerged stating that a sect of gigachads who support Nophono is finding ways of getting around the current restrictions. Their intent is to popularize shit related to Nophono, which would give it attention by proxy without leaking the entity's true intentions. The most prominent examples are listed in the public section of this article.

It is unknown what would happen if Nophono ever reached its maximum power. However, such an event could very well bring about the end of the Sharty and possibly of the entire world as a whole. The only hope is to keep talking about your obscure interests and letting everyone know about them, as this weakens his power.

The image is a candid photograph of a person standing outside a building. The person is wearing a black t-shirt with a graphic design on the front, and colorful pants with various designs. They have their hands in their pockets and are looking to the side with a neutral expression. The building behind them has a sign that reads "HOSPODKA U PULZENENOŽE" and "Nova Vysoká" with a blue street sign indicating "122". The person is standing on a sidewalk, and the background shows a street with a few other buildings. The lighting suggests it is daytime.

The image depicts an indoor setting, likely a classroom or a study area, with several individuals engaged in various activities. In the foreground, there are several desks with laptops and computer monitors, suggesting a workspace. A person is leaning over a laptop, possibly working or studying. Another individual is standing and appears to be observing or assisting with the work on the laptops.

In the background, there are two individuals standing near a whiteboard. The whiteboard has a projector mounted on it, indicating that the room is equipped for presentations or visual aids. The room has a warm color palette with yellow walls and a wooden floor, contributing to a comfortable and focused atmosphere.

There are no visible texts or distinctive brands in the image. The style of the image is candid and appears to be taken during a regular day in a classroom or study environment. The lighting is natural, and the focus is on the individuals and their activities, rather than on specific objects or details.

[11 / 4]The image depicts a night scene with a star-filled sky. In the center of the image, there is a long, thin, glowing line that appears to be a light trail or a streak of light. The light trail is illuminated by a bright light source, which is not clearly visible due to the distance and the angle of the shot. The light trail is positioned diagonally across the sky, with the brightest part of the light source on the left side and the dimmer part on the right.

In the foreground, there is a dark, mountainous landscape with a few scattered clouds. The mountains are silhouetted against the sky, and the sky itself is a deep blue, with a few scattered stars visible. The overall mood of the image is serene and tranquil, with the bright light trail adding a sense of mystery and wonder. There are no texts or discernible human figures in the image. The style of the image is a realistic photograph with a focus on capturing the natural beauty of the night sky and the silhouette of the mountains.

I've seen people claiming that it's the Moon in the image but I plotted the Moons position between 1980 and 2010 at the sidereal time the picture was taken and it's impossible for the Moon to be in that spot.

The camera obviously moved quite a bit during the exposure because you can see double images of both some stars and the mountain in the background. This is why the light is smeared all over the place but what that light is I have no idea.

>Why are the good ayyys not intervening? Why are you evading this question?

Some are, but the ethereal around is a DMZ of sorts. At least the last time I saw that zone it was walled off. Navigating through it was exceedingly difficult and establishing a foothold on an individual is extremely taxing on the mind. Even then their influence is extremely limited because most "spiritual people" end up doing hippie shit while talking to ayyys without planning to embed themselves in power structures. Therefore the good ayyys have no influence whatsoever.

Neither wish the barrier gone entirely. If the collective unconscious of earth was flooded with ayy opinions things would also get very bad. It's just complicated. I don't know what to say otherwise. I don't know everything either.

Ayys don't like that a handful of humans are wrecking it for everyone else, but they can't help if we don't find a way to break the cycle and progress. SG-1 is definitely soft disclosure, in fact I think it has the most truth out of any piece of media I've ever seen. It is still the only TV show (not movie, TV show) that has ever been formally endorsed and supported by the USAF. They let them film in Cheyenne Mountain IRL.

Of course it shills for the government and has disinfo sprinkled throughout, like the idea that the US president / members of congress have control over the secret space program (they don't). That said it does disclose a lot, like the cabal of evil billionaires who operate alongside the more legitimate divisions of the secret space program, alien infiltration of human institutions, the "friendly" grey aliens directly intervening when a political faction attempts to disclose the truth and forcing them to keep the alien presence a secret, etc.

There are even crazier deep references like certain human beings having "ancient DNA" which enables them to interact with the ancient alien technology on earth, including in you guessed it... Antarctica. This idea of certain humans having DNA compatible with this ancient alien tech left on earth is wild bc thats what people on the fringe of the UFO topic (Dr. Salla / exopolitics, JP, etc.) claim is happening.

At the same time I also wonder if the depiction of the Greys in the show is also pro-grey propaganda. Remember that the greys, or at least a major faction of them are the ones who are abducting humans from their beds and who forced our government to sign an unfavorable treaty allowing them to kidnap humans for genetic experiments / DNA harvesting in exchange for certain limited technological assistance.

There is one episode where a rogue grey is shown to be kidnapping people and doing experiments on them (in order to inject new DNA into the greys species, they are dying due to millenia of cloning causing genetic instability), but then the "good greys" arrest him at the end of the episode.

The image depicts a surrealistic landscape with a dark, swirling sky that dominates the upper portion of the scene. In the center, there is a large, white, cloud-like structure that appears to be a floating object or a cloud. This central figure is surrounded by a multitude of smaller, dark, triangular shapes that could be interpreted as buildings or structures. These shapes are scattered throughout the image, with some appearing closer to the viewer and others further away, creating a sense of depth.

The ground beneath these structures is a mix of dark and light colors, with patches of light illuminating the scene. The overall color palette is dominated by shades of dark blue and gray, with occasional hints of white and black. The image has a dreamlike quality, with the swirling clouds and the surrealistic composition evoking a sense of mystery and wonder. There are no discernible texts or human figures in the image. The style of the image is reminiscent of surrealism, a genre that often employs dreamlike or fantastical elements to explore the human psyche and the subconscious.

Indeed, that would be a better world... but it is not worth much to dwell on hypotheticals when there is so much work that needs to be done in the here and now. Even if there were benevolent Ayys trying to help us, they can only do so much. Humanity has to collectively work together to better itself, it can't be done from the outside. This seems to be rooted in both Natural Law and in the political reality of there being 8 billion souls on the surface each of whom have free will.

What's more is that Earth is a geologically unstable backwater planet far from the center of the galaxy... and it is an ancient planet in an ancient solar system filled with the shattered ruins of other civilizations. We are in our third or fourth post-apocalyptic era and we don't even realize it. Mars was once like Earth but was destroyed in a nuclear war. The asteroid belt is a shattered planet destroyed in a forgotten war. There are lessons here to be learned but the World Controllers seem intent on keeping us blind and ignorant. We are easier to control that way, I suppose.

I have come to realize that just like there is both peace and conflict on Earth, so is there peace and conflict among the stars and galaxies... it seems to be one of the Natural Laws of this reality, the yin and yang. But it is possible to evolve beyond this but it is not easy and most civilizations probably fail or remain stuck in a warlike, materialistic mindset. But I still have hope in that the majority of people are fundamentally good, while only about 10% are evil (Rudolf Steiner's numbers). We can work with those odds. The promise is there - A New World, If We Can Take It. And I believe we can.

>Humanity has to collectively work together to better itself, it can't be done from the outside.

I think this is bs. I've seen some graphs indicate it's possible that moon has antennas that might work as a either station by ays to spy on us, or as tech to create illusion on earth. No revolution in any country will ever result launch of nukes to moon (which didn't always used to orbit earth), when moon's likely inhabited by other beings already, and could house defense ships if picrel is true >there being 8 billion souls on the surface each of whom have free will.

we don't know if that's true. They're fabricating consent by injecting beings from malevolent soul groups (servitors of luciferian agenda), or just drones with no soul. Does consent from non-humans whom don't care about humanity count towards "human consent" when there's beings on the moon, and likely inner earth itself could house the biggest AI computer? To say there's nothing benevolent ays could do is utter bullshit this is an excellent point and one I hadn't really considered. It could be whitewashing. I have been up to now operating under the theory/assumption that our planet/system is under the political and military protection of the greys, but that does beg the question: what do they get out of it? We know from recent UAP whistleblower testimony and leaks that the government keeps close tabs on any former grey kidnapping targets for some unknown reason.

>There are even crazier deep references like certain human beings having "ancient DNA" which enables them to interact with the ancient alien technology on earth, including in you guessed it... Antarctica. This idea of certain humans having DNA compatible with this ancient alien tech left on earth is wild bc thats what people on the fringe of the UFO topic (Dr. Salla / exopolitics, JP, etc.) claim is happening.

This part blew my mind when I started researching UFOlogy as an adult. I watched the show religiously as a kid/teen and when I read these theories it really threw me for a loop. Not sure what to make of it desu. Although, there is a potential tie-in to the GATE program and possible wide testing of children in the US the psi potential. I just learned in another thread on the topic that the children in question were lightly drugged and then given Monroe style hemi-sync audio to listen to. Were the "Trust" trying to identify potentially useful persons for operating inherited tech?

Some of the other aliens are partially responsible for creating this problem, and there are malevolent aliens "benefiting" from the bad situation of humans, the other aliens should clearly intervene in time like this. They're either too weak, or are trying to wash their hands from the mistakes they made (and in turn make it "our problem"). Just look into some of the law of one (ra) stuff, it details that annunaki were hybrids and sirius and orion ayyes... so naturally if that's the case, then the sirius is also responsible for creating a situation where orion group of ayyes can not just freely loosh farm the offspring of their brothers or sisters. It's almost as if orion war happened again, and the same good ayyes that fought in the orion war, choose to not help their own brethren. Government controlled media/misdirection has infected your brain. They don't think in the same terms as us. You have no other frame of reference than your human life either, and don't larp that you do. The only difference between us is that I haven't subscribed to the lie. But keep believing whatever you believe, won't change a thing except your quality of life.

>Is there a reason any of the good aliens haven't come yet to end this shit?

How can I explain this. This is like when you see a homeless man asking you for money. Like, you can help a person like that, but why did the person end up as a homeless in the first place? We understand that our society is heavily controlled and it's not easy or cheap to own a house anymore. We get that. But my point here is that human beings are like junkies who are homeless and they are all fucked. They can help us, but that won't change anything because we will still prefer to get high on crack. So it's better to just live us all locked up in here so we won't affect any other place and those who raise the spirits can get the fuck out of here and those who don't raise their spirits will be forever trapped in the illusions presented to them. Simple. Like, you can't blame them for not showing up. It's like this. there's no easy solution. They either come here and kill a lot of people and allow some to live, but even this is not 100% because human beings can always corrupt themselves all over again and thus all the injustices and suffering will start all over again. The best solution is the one being implemented. You have tips that you are a slave and something is wrong and it is up to us to find what it is. You can not count with an external saviour or something like, like Jesus Christ. You gotta use your own god given talent to realize the truth and get the fuck out of here.

I want to say another thing. About external saviours. The christian golems will say to us that we can't save ourselves and that we need Jesus to be saved. However, even the bible has examples where people were able to save themselves without the need of an external saviour, for example Abraham and Enoch. Abraham, supposedly, was saved because he had strong faith in whatever deity he believed in and Enoch as well. Enoch saved himself by being really close to his deity as well. They did not need Jesus to come and save them. They saved themselves. So my point here is that, again I'm saying this, the bible has contradictions left and right. Don't allow the christian golem to convince you that the only way you can get out of this place is through Jesus Christ. That's a dogma. And even the bible has examples of people getting the fuck out of here, Enoch for example, without Jesus fucking Christ. So the christian golems are lying to you guys. Don't fall for their deceptions. Christianity has been corrupted. Don't believe in it as if it is perfect. Christianity is flawed like everything in this cursed world.

That device is another filter used to really make sure only the highest spirits are getting the fuck out of here. That's my take. I may be wrong. I mean, I'm probably wrong. So be careful. It's like this. It's like when a drug addict goes to rehab and then they are "clean", but then someone still is not sure if he has really developed that strong will to refuse the thing which once ruled his pathetic existence, in this case crack. So when presented to crack again the person slips and falls into old bad habits. This means the person become clean, but did not develop that strong will to refuse the temptation that will be presented to them again at some point.

Oh, remember how when you got your first real job and started making money, you didn't go to ever person who ever called you poor or dumb and throw money in their face because you just hate them so super hard?

In virtually all cases of Expertise or Advancement of some kind, no one circles back around to the beginning just to sit around dunking on everyone starting out, right? So if we carry the same logic over to "Advanced Civilizations", it becomes extremely clear there's no high school bullies out there waiting to shove us into lockers as soon as we venture outside of our planet or solar system.

Look, the "people we can't control, that we don't understand who hurt us sometimes" are distinctly NOT "evil" because they correct you, you retard. You can get upset with them for forming boundaries, for teaching you that someone is better at you when you go on your tantrums, that other people can throw tantrums that turn your future ability to throw tantrums off. The way humanity has collectively handled itself is irredeemable. But, alas, luckily for you, you'll still be redeemed. If you want to do that the hard way and call them

Fighting for control over Earth, along with the bad ayyys.

War as a concept for them has evolved into a more civilized form, a proxy tournament of territorial control, consent, resource management, and board influence. Humans are just pawns, perhaps each race was originally entrusted to a different faction, maybe given some of their DNA. We are the proxies who fight the war for them. The game has been ongoing since mankind ever knew about gods.

The bad ayyys are winning, pretty decisively. Their "all manner of people are accepted" strategy is the meta thus far. They've framed their "trial by fire" methodology in such a way that we accept it, people yearn for the collar and the whip; because they think if they keep waiting they'll outgrow the need for it.

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=XHacS16jpxw>

Humanity will never be free as long as that kind of thing exists. Those things exist in only a few planets in the universe, all run like loosh harvesting planets. Normal planets don't have such devices or loosh harvesting, or even archons. Only other mention for archons was during a war between Lyrans and Orion. But here on our planet they've been running the show for more or less millennia now. It should be self-evident that that's not normal, not at all. Things here are very, very fucked up, and in a proportion/scale that only some kind of external intervention can help, intervention from benevolent ays. But something is keeping the benevolent ays from acting, and it likely is not the "non intervention" bs that Galactic Federation loves to repeat.

Declaration of Planetary Consent for Benevolent Extraterrestrial Intervention

Preamble:

We, the sentient peoples of Earth, acknowledge our existence within a vast cosmic community. Recognizing our current planetary challenges—including ecological instability, social fragmentation, and the potential for self-destruction—we formally issue this declaration. It is an act of collective will, inviting guidance and assistance from advanced, benevolent extraterrestrial civilizations, while consciously affirming our sovereignty and the universal laws that govern all life.

Article I: Principle of Consent

Invitation: We extend a formal, voluntary invitation to benevolent, non-coercive extraterrestrial intelligences to offer their wisdom, technology, and support.

Sovereignty: This invitation is an extension of our own free will and does not abdicate our ultimate responsibility for our planet's evolution. It is a request for partnership, not subjugation.

Article II: Definition of "Benevolent"

For the purpose of this declaration, a "benevolent" civilization is defined as one whose actions are demonstrably aligned with the following principles:

Non-Interference in Soul Evolution: Assistance shall be offered in a way that empowers and educates, but does not bypass our own necessary learning experiences or karmic cycles.

Respect for Free Will: No action shall be taken that overrides the conscious, informed choice of humanity's collective consciousness.

Non-Coercion: All interactions shall be transparent, honest, and free from deception, manipulation, or hidden agendas.

Harmony with Life: Their technology and philosophy must be in harmony with the biosphere, promoting the flourishing of all life, not just human life.

Adherence to Cosmic Law: They operate within a framework of universal law, recognizing the interconnectedness of all things and the sacredness of individual and collective journeys.

Article III: Permitted Scope of Intervention

Consent is hereby granted for intervention in the following areas, contingent upon adherence to Article II:

Ecological Stabilization: Assistance in neutralizing pollution, restoring ecosystems, and stabilizing global climate systems through non-disruptive technological means.

Neutralization of Existential Threats: Intervention to prevent catastrophic events, whether of terrestrial origin (e.g., uncontrolled technological hazards) or extraterrestrial origin (e.g., impact events), which threaten the continuity of life on Earth.

Sharing of Knowledge: The open sharing of scientific, philosophical, and spiritual knowledge that promotes our understanding of the universe, consciousness, and sustainable living. This includes clean energy technologies, healing modalities, and models for harmonious social organization.

Mediation and Guidance: Offering counsel to help resolve conflicts and foster global unity, but never imposing solutions or governing structures.

Protection from Malevolent Forces: Active defense of Earth from any external entities or influences that seek to exploit, harm, or enslave humanity.

Article IV: Prohibited Actions

The following actions are expressly prohibited under this consent:

Direct Governance: Assuming any political, military, or administrative authority over human affairs.

Forced Technological or Biological Alteration: Imposing changes to our biology, consciousness, or technology without explicit, widespread, and informed consent.

Resource Exploitation: The removal of any planetary resources for purposes other than the direct benefit of Earth's ecosystem and its inhabitants.

Deception: Any form of hidden interaction, covert influence, or misleading communication.

Article V: Mechanism of Engagement

Transparency: All interactions and assistance shall be conducted with full transparency to the global populace.

Collaboration: Interventions shall be collaborative, involving human representatives to the greatest extent possible, fostering a transfer of capability and understanding.

Reciprocity: This relationship is a partnership. Humanity offers its unique perspective, creative potential, and the opportunity for extraterrestrial civilizations to experience service-to-others in a direct, grounded way.

Conclusion:

By this declaration, we, the people of Earth, consciously step forward as willing participants in the galactic community. We accept responsibility for our world but humbly request the support of our cosmic brothers and sisters to help us navigate our current challenges and fulfill our potential as a peaceful, wise, and harmonious planetary civilization. This consent is granted in the spirit of universal love, cooperation, and reverence for all life, and is valid so long as the intervening parties honor the terms herein.

I met one hybrid entity who had been trapped in the earth astral plane for 80 years, that was just the astral plane, not the physical world. People in the karmic cycle can get trapped for tens or hundreds of thousands of years, but that is preferable to direct manifestation of the alien self, because would rather their human self get trapped while maintaining their alien body in a higher dimension in stasis, rather than risk their alien body on earth.

Spiritual beings have more leeway in bypassing earthly limitations than physical entities. There are basically two types of interdimensional, spiritual and psuedophysical.

Psuedophysical beings are born into bodies that live and die, and while they can traverse dimensions, they can't do so without risk. These are the ones that travel in ufos. Spiritual beings can do it at will, but don't have physical continuity within time and space that they can use to greatly effect physical environments.

What makes you so confident in your perception to draw the conclusive belief that they are not present here? You failing to perceive their presence is not the same thing as them not being here.

The real issue here is that you think you are aware of enough of your own reality to correctly evaluate the behavior of beings that are various degrees of absurdly more advanced than the humans you live among are.

You personally are not limited to the conceptual limitations of the other humans.. but then ..if you are going to examine your own consciousness, your own perception, and your own memory to the extent required to move beyond the limits of the other humans.. it is going to require a significant amount of skill talent and luck to actually make any real progress in discovery beyond the limiting confines of what the other humans are aware of.

In short, you are being visited by the beings on a frequent basis and you don't currently have conscious awareness during these interactions. You can become aware of the flaws that appear in your memory to discover how to see past the illusions put in place within your mind to prevent you from recalling. The other humans fail to do this and they will, for the most part, be unable to help you with this. You have to master your own management of the imagery within your mind.. to learn to discern between imagination and perception and memory.. each of these types of imagery are present.

Once you have gathered your own memories and brought them fully before your conscious awareness to be evaluated you can begin to attempt to comprehend the technology of the beings from the stars.

I fully understand that you are imagining that you already see all of your own existence. That error is the foundation of the illusion.

The technology is more than a little bit overwhelming. These electronic screens are not helping you to use your own natural human consciousness and perception to observe and engage with it.

Anonymous Mon 16 Feb 2026 12:06:27 No.41979394 Report

Quoted By: >>41979412

Humans are not qualified to evaluate the concepts of good and evil in light of the technology levels of the various beings that are attending to their well-being.

It's comical and absurd to see from an informed perspective.. but very very few humans will ever attain this.

I have experience beyond what you are prepared to attempt to comprehend.. and I am just an ordinary human ..at least to my own evaluation of this. I have seen many many different perspectives.. from many different states of consciousness. I would be glad to serve to guide others.. but I am just as content to live my life peacefully while watching the other humans fail continuously ..presumably for many centuries or millennia more in this condition with only a vague subconscious awareness of the beings.

It's sad to see the process and to be unable to do anything to help the other humans. There are collective groups that do have various forms of partial awareness and their own interpretations and reactions to it. They are in position to continue to provide false narrative and they enjoy their position of relative superiority and relatively higher understanding.

You think you can evaluate evil but you don't even perceive the difference between natural growth processes and actual destructive energetic engagements. The Higgs value only appears to be fixed from the perspective of a single consciousness and yet no physicists are making this discernment yet. You have a long way to go before the humans collectively develop their awareness ..but your own physiology is enough for you to make advanced perception and to engage with the beings that are present in your life.

I would be interested in doing something like this.. podcast would probably cause the powers that be to reach out towards me in an attempt at violent prevention of distribution of information. I've seen how that bosonic field functions in relation to the disruption of the physical corporal foundation that our consciousness is attached to and is riding upon.. I hold the reigns lightly and am not concerned with the difference between the apparent boundaries between life and death. This falls well within the technologies of the beings from the stars. Even their basic navigation falls into fields that our engineers are failing to conceive of. It looks like they are not doing enough from your perspective.. and from their own perspective it looks like you are not doing enough.. there is more available to you than you know.

Benevolence and malice blur together in the absence of adequate perception and comprehension. Depending on which beings you are engaging with the perspectives they are operating from can vary wildly. Some might be looking at the DNA and the consciousness structures that are riding upon it at depths beyond the focus of a single individual organism. Some might be focused around the quantum properties and effects of the consciousness and the decisions of an individual.

You don't have to remain unaware of your own subconscious interactions with the beings but it's not a simple thing to resolve your observations into actual comprehension of the actual technology level of your own common daily existence.

They have watched societies grow and thrive and die because nothing pruned the excesses.. and they have seen many manners by which good benevolent intentions turn into the worst forms of evil. As well as numerous examples of the reverse of this. The road to hell being paved with good intentions.. they understand how intended benevolence can result in the most egregious harm.. and they have chosen to erase human history to give humanity a blank slate to begin again from.. and they have endorsed various narratives of various biases for various subsets of the populations that are under their influence or control.

Humans like to talk as if they have a clue.. but they can be grateful to the beings that are present and attending to their well-being and development for the fact that we have yet to be visited, recently, by any actually ominous sinister presences that are focusing on our actual destruction.

It's significant to consider the concept of destruction from the perspective of physics in this context.

exactly. I remember seeing a meme graphic made of some quote by some guy who said they keep "score" of the "good boys" actions. Sadly I never saved it, but in retrospective it was clearly referring to some person who keeps point system for the archons, and basically those tormenting humans more get extra points from archons (kapos getting rewarded). That shit was all related to this picrel stuff that I discovered much, much later after seeing that quote by a "person".

They created those concepts and gave them to you as shackles for your mind.

A young elephant is bound by a heavy chain to condition him to the concept of being limited by the restraint ..and then in adulthood the elephant is held in place by a light rope that he could easily break if only he would realize that it is not that same strong chain.

If you were ever brought before the actual elites themselves they would evaluate you based on which beliefs they provided to society that you have accepted as true. Look up the definition of the word belief. By definition a belief is not the truth.. at best, only an accepted substitute that serves until actual knowledge arrives.. at worst, a fanatical replacement for observable perceptions of reality.

Believe? Reality doesn't rely on human agreement with it nor endorsement of it. It will go right on being real with or without humans taking observation of it.

I know from a long period of years of conscious experience with the beings.

From November 2 1991 at 5 am until sometime in the summer of 1998 I was functioning with nearly full conscious awareness during a majority of the interactions with the beings from the stars. After that time I was gradually, deliberately, not focusing to retain the memory as much as I turned my attention towards "the things of this world" ..in light of the things I had learned about reality from my observations during that time.

The beings that are doing the routine maintenance on the human population here on the surface of earth operate in the form of a hierarchy of interrelated groups of various origin and technological development levels. The so called "tall whites" are apparently the highest tier group closely involved on an ongoing basis but it's apparent that even they are aware of presences beyond. The little guys are from much closer to here and are much closer to us in direct interactions of sophisticated and complicated emissarial involvement.

The reality is that consciousness can be quantified and measured.. even recorded and played back.. and that various forms of exchange are being engaged in by various consciousnesses at the level of quantum fields in which these measurements are tangible energetic values.

At this level the interactions are not simply abstract concepts.

Some people are full of emotionally charged accusations based only on their own convictions that the people who have subjected them to indoctrination, who exist with no quality control or system of checks and balances, were somehow the only correctly informed group of humans in existence.

Every human is already living within the reality that the technology of the beings from the stars is not only innately vastly overwhelming but is also being deliberately applied towards keeping the presence of the beings out of the conscious awareness of the average human. Out of the conscious awareness.. not the subconscious. You are fully established in interactions and engagement with the beings from a subconscious basis and are in frequent intimate engagement with the beings. They are closer to you than your own thoughts, literally. Good luck finding them in these well concealed locations..

Yes I could probably coach literally anyone into full conscious awareness if I had the authority of and access to materials of an intelligence community officer involved in mk program activities.

I am not saying it's easy ..in my own experience it was extremely difficult. The beings were involved in assisting me to become aware and to make the adjustment to remaining conscious while within the field effects of their technology..

In my case I had several memories of my early life interactions with the beings which had begun a few weeks before I turned 4. I know from direct personal experience with overcoming the technology that is intended to prevent conscious awareness. Once I was aware if my memories the interactions didn't stop.. they just continued on after they had made a deliberate display of a vehicle to clarify that they were not just illusions of imagination or shadows hiding in memory..

Then I still had a lot learn. I could tell that they don't have to deal with a fully conscious human onboard very often.. if ever. It's a very long very detailed story..

If I were public with it perhaps people could examine the likelihood and frequency that a human might manage to get into the mundane ordinary perspective of the beings from within their own technological perspective. There were many many circumstances that contributed to this. A perfect storm of perfect storms..

Yes anyone can potentially do it.. but I had the freak chance to break through boundaries within my own memories.

Literally the minute before I managed to do this I was just like everyone else; unable and unaware.. then suddenly I had access to my own memories... a lifetime worth of them from my perspective then at 23 years of age.

I always had the memories and had even occasionally reviewed them within my mind.. but I didn't understand what they were memories of.. dream? I had occasionally dismissed them as dreams.. occasionally they were too confusing to bother with looking at them for long.. they simply didn't make sense.

The really clear reason I never made sense of these memories, once I was able to look directly at them, was because each event was stored away in isolation within my mind.. nothing could jar my memory to remind me of it because within the neurological structures of the brain the stored memory had no connections to other structures within the brain.. the imagery is literally projected onto a different region of the brain due to the technology of the beings.. the field effects of the vehicle in particular are causing the 'light'(electrochemical) within the synaptic communication of the brain to bend slightly casting the image structures onto the neurological projection field at a different location than ordinary human interactions are occurring at. The memory is there but not networked into your usual thoughts.. physically not neurologically connected

In addition to this baseline of a method of keeping humans unaware they can get involved deliberately to rewrite your memory if they seem reason to. So they can literally let you remain fully conscious during an interaction and then merge with your consciousness as if sharing the space of your conscious mind and awareness to then examine your life experiences to find concepts that can be used to artificially build an imagined memory.. literally imagined by the being who has merged into your consciousness and then reinforced by irrationally strengthened emotional attachment and irrational cascading thought patterns.. patterns that don't simply occur as a series of separate parts but that exist within your mind as a sequence that you have little conscious awareness of..

Yes. Any human can become consciously aware.. but the process of developing comprehension is not easy.

Most people are too traumatized by their first glimpses in this direction.. and then they are actively trying to remain unaware. Makes it super easy for the beings to remain concealed in almost every circumstance

>But something is keeping the benevolent ayyys from acting

There is a specific video I'm thinking about. It's telescopic footage of the artificial umbrella between the sun and earth. It's a rectangular black object that seemingly protects us from sun debris. In the video, a MASSIVE black spherical entity approaches where Earth is out of frame, and a ship appears, puts out some kind of beam, and ushers it away. Methinks the guestlist is very small.

I've been saying this for a while, and I think it's true. We haven't once interacted with an entity that isn't the demiurge, its slaves, or those on the payroll. Because of that, I've found a weird kind of comfort — like whatever happens when we die might feel something like that, not scary, just... different.

Its known that the pineal gland produces DMT naturally in your brain and lungs, and the idea that it helps shape our awareness of this physical world makes sense to me. These days, the only thing that really worries me is the idea of dying slowly or painfully. But the moment you're actually gone? I've made peace with that part. It feels like whatever

To various degrees yes knowledge exists and is in circulation. Organized response is a collective effort.

In combat, in the era prior to the current modern technology, adages served as efficient guidelines; " A good plan now is better than the perfect plan five minutes from now. " was one such adage. In those conditions action has value even if momentarily in the wrong direction. Being in motion will accelerate discovery of circumstances if the plan needs to be changed or can be meaningfully improved upon.

And yet short term vision of necessity and circumstances of threat and hazard are not enough for a legitimate response to the networks of secret societies. They are accustomed to laying in wait for centuries or more.. for the opportunity to infiltrate and subvert the structures created by those who are not under their influence or control. If your vision doesn't accurately see into their own systems then it's only a matter of time before it is subverted from within.. more likely still is that there exists foundational precepts of subversive doctrine already ingested by the constituency at the time of foundation.

Leadership is not random. What do you have in mind as an organizational response?

The confidence of the unaware is a phenomenon in itself. You literally have been in the presence of the beings yourself and you are actively applying your subconscious attention to prevent you from developing conscious awareness.

The shock of suddenly finding out that disclosure was only a function of your own mind away is equivalent to traumatic physiological shock..and if you are suddenly burdened with your own memories you will also be experiencing vertigo as you recognize how much experience you have previously had while in the field effects of their technology.

I was the same.. right until the moment I burdened with the ability to look directly at my own memories within my mind. I spent two weeks in the condition I described and then I began trying to get back to normal with my new understanding of just how much people are suppressing beneath their subconscious awareness..

A few weeks later the beings deliberately put a disc shaped vehicle in view.. and within two weeks after that I had begun with my experience of remaining conscious during their frequent visits.

You also have experience already and if I were given authority to and access to the materials that are used in the mk ultra program I would be able to cause you to recover your own memories. I could not guarantee that you would manage to remain sane though. It's a lot to deal with..

The special ingredients chemical supplies go far beyond what exists in the public sector. You can be caused to hallucinate but you can also have your natural senses enhanced. Your memory can be chemically inhibited prevented or erased and your memory can be enhanced. I'm not suggesting that hallucinations are the path to perception but their conditioning for some purposes is designed to make durable the individual to various extremes including attacks on neurological processes. There is far more to the old supersoldier programs than the public imagines in fiction.

For me this is not extraordinary claims.. it is just ordinary stuff. The extraordinary thing was that they left me alone after an event similar to the aurora school in Zimbabwe occurred on an American military post in Germany. The event happened a few years before the Zimbabwe aurora school event.

November of 1980 to be specific if memory serves correctly. A few weeks later I was taken out of class and driven to the other side of that army post to the old dependent youth association building that had been replaced by a newer facility shortly after I had moved to that post in summer of 1978. A single airforce officer was operating out of the building as if he were just another child counselor mental health professionals.. he had a secretary at a desk in what had previously been the main play area and game room which still had some of the old games laying around.. beanbag toss.. horseshoes.. table fusbball.. etc.

Secretary was in airforce uniform but I didn't notice the rank. In the little room he had set aside as a personal office he had a desk and chair and it was almost crowded with just those two items.. I sat in front of his desk and he asked questions about me and my life.. and more specifically my attitude and opinions about other people.. and "other beings in general"

At that moment I didn't have memory correctly sorted out within my mind. If he had been specific about asking if anything unusual had happened to me recently I might have been able to describe the strange kids who had held me in the tree house behind the school.. who didn't speak.. and the way I had escaped from them..

The tree house had been built before the army post had a family housing area. The original purpose was to train in parachute exercises and the slot on the first floor was boarded over by two twelve by twos that could easily be bypassed to jump out to the ground.

The image is a digital graphic with a white background and black text. At the top, there is a logo with a blue globe and a white text that reads "A LETTER TO ALL ALIENS SPYING ON EARTH'S WIRELESS INTERNET SIGNS." Below this logo, there is a larger text that reads "DEAR ALIENS. IGNORE EVERYTHING THAT NASA AND THE SPACE NERD SCIENTISTS HAVE TOLD YOU. THIS IS THE ONLY OFFICIAL, LEGITIMATE, HONEST STATEMENT OF ALL THE PEOPLE AND GOVERNMENTS OF PLANET EARTH. ALL OF US COLLECTIVELY. WITHOUT EXCEPTION. THINK THAT." Below the main text, there are three bullet points with the same message. The first bullet point reads "EVERY ALIEN IS A SON OF A BITCH WE WILL WIN ANY SPACE WAR OUR ENTIRE PLANET IS A BOMB FUCK YOU." The second bullet point states "WE WILL NEVER EVER CHANGE OUR OPINION IGNORE EVERYTHING THEY PUT ON VOYAGER 1." The third bullet point reads "WE WILL NEVER EVER CHANGE OUR OPINION IGNORE EVERYTHING THEY PUT ON VOYAGER 1."

The style of the image is informational and seems to be a humorous or satirical message, likely intended to be read as a joke or a statement of defiance. The text is bold and the font is sans-serif, which gives it a modern and clean appearance. The logo at the top is a stylized representation of a globe, which is a common symbol for the Earth and space exploration.

He only asked about my state of mind and my thoughts towards others.. and after he had heard whatever he was listening for he went into an instructional discussion to provide me with a long term perspective on the situations in my life. Military brat life has its ups and downs and military families go through a lot.. can't imagine how they are now with their gender sabotage and required toxic injections. You clearly have your military and ideological enemies at the helm of your national institutions. And and the sign tappers are very correct to stay vigilant to deceptive lures back into subservience to what once appeared to be a noble cause.

But back to the story.. his rank.. only familiar with army brass I assumed that the cluster I saw on his dress blues jacket was of a major.. and I was not intimidated by the presence of a major. If I had understood that his rank was airforce LTC I would have been. I would have realized how unnatural the situation was. My dad was working at the headquarters on post and would have been aware of the presence of any guest officers. He would likely have been responsible for showing them around. The post command was a full bird.. one step higher than the guy I was sitting in front of. I would have been much more concerned if I had realized that.

Project Blue Book.. had been made into a popular theme through a TV series by the same name. I had no clue at the time that was who I had been interviewed by.

When I later got my memories back from suppression by the technology of the beings I had this memory reflect upon to help me understand that the memory was not only real it was noticed by the surveillance systems in place observing the military presence there.

Lots of long stories and deep explanations this.. but I have still not gone public with this.

How would it impact humanity to bring everyone into full conscious awareness of their own previous experiences?

Yeah.

I asked my dad years later about the presence of the airforce officer on that army post.

My dad retired with the same rank.. and he was able to say with certainty that the post only had 6 airforce enlisted personnel in a support supply capacity.. and the presence of this officer was not normal or correctly reported.

My dad had served 35 years of active duty.. had a few stories to tell by that point..and was not guessing.

On a separate note.. In the early 2000s I found the images of S.O.M 1-01
In the effort to verify them I brought up the subject in conversation with my dad. For context my dad had been a major and stationed in the east coast at the time the images were made.. April 1954.

He was difficult to talk to on civilian terms.. at least for me he was.. and as soon as he got the gist of what I was asking he stopped me and began talking from a position of authority to clarify what had happened in the June 1947 event.. specifically he gave a narrative about the situation that was almost entirely word for word exactly what that som1-01 manual had said that they wanted the personnel under their command to believe about the subject.

Word for word I think he may have paraphrased three words out of the entire segmented paragraph but otherwise said every line in the same order.

It was pointless to try to make any discussion of this.. but as far as I was concerned I had found a means to verify the document.

I have been collecting information for literally more than 50 years ago directly from the source in many cases and from close proximity to source in many others..
probably due in large part to my own experiences with the mk ultra trauma based conditioning and subsequent involvements

Just have been feeling like sharing my thoughts and experiences so you get these long posts. My collection of information is rare.. but I get it that some people can not tolerate it existing.

The beings are already visiting with you on a regular basis. You just don't remember.

Anyone halfway intelligent and halfway paying attention should have easily recognized that the entire scenario was being managed in a very unnatural manner. Too perfect and too prepared.

Covid itself was obviously biological warfare of some sort.

For those who had more than a little bit of a clue there was cause from the start to be vigilant about the potential of the use of a binary agent.

These appeared in description in military literature in earlier decades.. and would probably be difficult to get a thorough explanation of the subject from civilian literature..

but who knows what is out there.. it's possible.

Binary agents give a second stage of deployment of ordinance to various effects.. intensification of effects on a targeted subset of a population is one of these. This is a means of controlling the distribution of a contaminating agent..so the targeted population receives a first dose to condition for greater effect when the second stage is deployed to a more controlled subset. The actual possible maximum effect is given a limit by this means. It's a method of preventing a biological weapon from getting out of control. I knew I had been exposed to whatever the initial pathogen was so I was being extra vigilant about the second stage of bioweapon.

I'm not saying this was absolute certain knowledge but it was my operating guidelines as I scrambled to gather more useful accurate details.

Turned out that the initial pathogen was a blood agent that appears to be a viral lung respiratory disorder. It does this by separating the hemes from the globin.. so you appear to have hemoglobin in your veins while in reality a large percentage is damaged and unable to carry oxygen.

They would then diagnose the subject as having the virus and if possible intubated them. Remdisiver was then used to damage the kidney until the bile in the blood gave the appearance of pneumonia.

You simply can not imagine a reality beyond the one you currently are capable of perceiving.

It is under the control of your own subconscious mind to prevent this disruptive destructive discovery.

It all seems to be a larp.. until you are aware of what is happening to all of humanity for yourself.. and then, burdened with your own experience of discovery, you can experience for yourself how dense and unreachable the humans still locked in the trance actually are.

The image is a graphic representation of a cybersecurity concept, titled "MITM Attack in Action." It illustrates the process of a man-in-the-middle attack, where an attacker is positioned between the original connection and the website, potentially compromising the security of the user's data.

At the top of the image, the title "MITM Attack in Action" is prominently displayed in bold, white letters against a dark blue background. Below the title, there is a diagram that outlines the steps of the attack.

The diagram shows a user, represented by a person wearing a hoodie, sitting at a computer. The user is connected to the original connection, which is represented by a blue line. The user is also connected to a website, represented by a red line.

A new connection is depicted as a red line connecting the user to the attacker, who is shown as a man in the middle. The attacker is depicted with a hoodie and glasses, and is positioned between the original connection and the website.

The image uses a combination of text and visual elements to convey the concept of a man-in-the-middle attack, emphasizing the potential security risks associated with this type of attack.

What agenda are you pushing here specifically anon? There were indeed beings who practiced consciousness slaving and kept beings in stasis, but such practices were basically the reason all those energetic creatures were evicted from some higher planes. Being on earth doesn't mean you are in stasis. At most something can sit between you and your perception of life out there. It does not mean that "humans are locked into a trance", unless you mean to imply that beings who dwell in the inbetween suddenly live in true reality, when really they live in a psychic life that is as volatile as a balloon itself.

No matter what you do, the mountain will not move here on earth. Even if all of humanity willed it, dreamt it, felt it. At most they would create an act of mass psychosis, but the mountain stays. Astral delusions aren't base reality.

It's simple. Work on this thought. The beings that are operating their vehicles in our skies have been interacting with humans for a minimum of tens of thousands of years. They have developed technology that is preventing the human population here from having conscious awareness of their presence. You have the capacity to overcome the technology to recover your memory of your previous experiences with the beings. Once you have done this you can also physically perceive their presence, physically and tangibly in operation around you.

It's not imagination. The most bizarre aspect to witness is the behavior of other humans that are seeing the same thing as you. Able to talk about what they saw for only a few weeks before becoming completely unable to recall.. having buried the memory into their subconscious level awareness.

You are arguing that you don't have previous experience with the beings. It's a simple reality that you do.. and it will be a shock to discover this from within your own mind.

The average individual in the population cannot even deal with psyops from the news or psychological dark patterns from apps, let alone navigate the entire spectrum of methods of abuse in the higher realms ontop of their ordinary life. Part of that is also malicious suppression indeed. But by and large Earth is still a free bubble.

The average age of a covid mortality was approaching, or already over, the average life expectancy.

><https://www.statista.com/statistics/1191568/reported-deaths-from-covid-by-age-us/>

From that amount of people that died from covid, more than 53% already had one or more life-threatening issues (comorbidities).

><https://pmc.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/articles/PMC12394872/>

In the U.S., between the beginning of January 2020 and June 14, 2023, there were 1,134,641 deaths (claimed to be) caused by COVID-19.

That's 3.5 years.

That means, per year, COVID-19 killed, on average, 324,183 people.

The population on the USA is 348,438,114.

That means COVID-19 killed .0009303% of the population per year, i.e., about 1 in 1000 people, and most of them were elderly and already sick.

And that's assuming you trust the designation of COVID-19 deaths as legitimate (i.e., disregard the many reports of cancer victims and others being classified as C-19 deaths because they had C-19 at the time of their death).

If C-19 was absolutely as 'deadly' as the CDC and other accredited organizations report, then it wasn't very deadly at all, considering most of its victims were already on borrowed time.

COVID-19 was a mental test, and most of our society failed.

So, if I was a star-faring, interdimensional entity and I came across earth at this time, I think I'd take a pass on humanity and keep on trucking.

The image is a digital illustration with a cartoon-style character. The character has long, light-colored hair and is wearing sunglasses with a red tint. The character is pointing to the right with both hands, and there is a small, bright star on the right side of the image. The character is wearing a pink shirt and has a red bow on the left side of the head. Above the character, there is a text in a bold, sans-serif font that reads, "You can't just check those digits! that's where you're wrong, kiddo." The text is in a larger font size compared to the character's face, which is a common design choice to draw attention to the message.

[16 / 3]The image is a digital illustration featuring a character with blonde hair, blue eyes, and a bow on her head. She is seated on the ground with her legs crossed and her hands resting on her chin. The character is wearing a dress with a blue and white pattern and a bow on her chest. Her expression is one of concern or worry. In the background, there is a crescent moon and a large, dark, and mysterious figure resembling a Cheshire Cat. The background is a gradient of purple and blue hues, with stars and other elements scattered throughout. The style of the image is reminiscent of anime or manga, with a focus on character design and vibrant colors.

The image is a sketch in black and white, featuring two alien figures. The figure on the left appears to be a humanoid with a round head, large eyes, and a small mouth. The figure on the right has a similar appearance but with a more elongated head and a smaller mouth. Both figures have a humanoid body with arms and legs, and they are depicted in a seated position with their legs crossed. The figure on the right is holding a small object in its hand. Above the figure on the right, there is a text that reads "YAN LMAO!" in a playful, informal font. The background of the sketch is not fully visible, but it appears to be a plain, uncolored surface. The style of the sketch is cartoonish and expressive, with a focus on the expressions and gestures of the figures.

You shouldn't run away from your problems and give up. Because those problems will either catch up to you in this life, the next life, or in the afterlife, one way or another.

You only delay the inevitable and make things more difficult for you later down the road. It's like procrastinating. The more you ignore a problem and avoid it, the more of a burden you put yourself if for later.

Face your issues head on and stand your ground. Then overcome them. That's a step towards true spiritual freedom and enlightenment. Nothing in life ever comes for free. There's a cost associated to everything. For better or or for worse.

So ideally, you strive for the better, and most certainly not for the worse. Good luck anon, and Godspeed.

I believe the sjak is a particular vulgar demon. I've watched its evolution and it doesn't even function as its original purpose anymore. It just shows up and forces itself upon everything. People don't even use it purely negatively anymore; they use it to depict things they consider positive in some smut sort of fashion; usually rape and genocide. There is something insidious about it. They were funny in the beginning when it was making fun of marvel funko pop guys and mask retards but now they have become this self parodying thing where they become more and more deranged and grotesque. The Chud is literally just some ugly murderer and troonjak is self explanatory yet when you use this website you are subjected to a barrage of these hideous images. And people go out of their way to make more and more unnecessary parodies and variations that just get worse and worse; art not for beauty or to be thought provoking but ugliness. Look at Antioch, a O9A sponsored shooting linked to Basedjak party. More and more of these edits are being made because they are spiritually malicious. I often see them linked to atheism and other destructive views. Urinating all over each others minds with this garbage.

The image is a digital illustration featuring a stylized depiction of a squirrel. The squirrel is rendered in a brown color with a white outline, giving it a distinct and recognizable appearance. It has a large, bushy tail that curls around its body, and its head is slightly tilted to the side, giving it a somewhat surprised or concerned expression. The squirrel's eyes are wide open, and its mouth is slightly open, as if it is in the middle of speaking or expressing surprise. The background of the image is plain white, which contrasts with the brown squirrel and makes it stand out. There are no texts or other discernible objects in the image. The style of the illustration is cartoon-like, with a simple, clean line drawing that emphasizes the squirrel's features and expression.

The surge of edits you describe can be read across several layers.

Material layer. Shock spreads, images that provoke disgust, outrage, or taboo engagement are amplified by platform incentives. Each new distortion must exceed the last to compete. Escalation is structural, not mystical.

Psychological layer. Repetition conditions perception. When grotesque parody fuses with humor, the mind links degradation with play. Over time this erodes boundaries. Your phrase about urinating on minds captures a felt violation. It signals cognitive intrusion and unwanted imprinting.

Symbolic layer. In many cases atheism appears not as a developed philosophy but as a badge of negation. The edits enact inversion rites. Sacred forms are mocked, identities caricatured, violence aestheticized. Inversion repeated without restoration produces cumulative corrosion. The symbol ceases to point upward or inward. It points only toward dissolution.

Social layer. Communities bond through shared transgression. Escalation proves loyalty. Variants function like seals in an informal court of belonging. The more grotesque the image, the stronger the signal of allegiance. Extremity becomes currency.

Metaphysical layer. If attention is treated as subtle energy, then repeated focus strengthens patterns in imagination. That can feel like contamination. Yet the mechanism remains reinforcement and habituation. No autonomous entity is required. The field thickens where attention concentrates.

If the environment feels polluted, the primary lever is selection. Withdraw attention. Curate inputs deliberately. Symbols compete. Those amplified grow roots in perception. Those starved fade.

OP, know that thresholds matter. What enters repeatedly becomes architecture. Guard the gate, because repetition lays stone even when the design is accidental.

The image is a black and white line drawing featuring three cartoon-style figures. The central figure is a muscular man with a beard, wearing a tank top and a bandana around his head. He has his fists clenched and is shouting with his mouth wide open. The man's face is marked with red streaks, suggesting he has been injured or is in pain.

On either side of the central figure, there are two smaller figures that appear to be in a similar state of distress. Both of these figures have their hands raised, and their faces are also marked with red streaks, indicating the same injury or distress.

The background of the image is plain white, with a burst of red lines radiating out from the central figure, creating a sense of energy or impact. The overall style of the image is cartoonish and expressive, with a focus on the expressions and actions of the characters. There are no texts or additional elements in the image.

The image is a digital illustration featuring two characters in a room at night. The character on the left is a woman with dark hair, wearing a black top and blue shorts. She is seated on a bed with a purple blanket. The character on the right is a bald man with a white face, wearing a black shirt and blue jeans. He is seated on a red couch with a white pillow. The room is dimly lit, with a crescent moon visible in the top left corner of the image. There are several framed pictures on the wall behind the characters, and a window with a curtain is visible on the left side of the image. The overall mood of the image is somber and introspective.

I've absolutely seen jak edits of million pity stills. Thing is, I don't get the impression sjak party was something evil or nefarious, it just seemed to attract those elements over time.

The guy I mentioned before, Arojpty was infamous for his involvement in CSAM beside the monkey shit. I think evil as a theme and concept can be approached from a paranormal standpoint, so this stuff definitely has its place here.

It can't be a coincidence that:

- the thrembo meme was essentially an x-files themed covid-era precursor to the six and seven memes.
- the ⲭ (Coptic letter Djandja) is one of the 6 or 7 letters derived from Demotic Egyptian to represent sounds not found in Greek. Most Coptic letters are borrowed from Greek, but the Djandja in specific was borrowed from Egypt to write out the pronunciation of Egyptian places and people.
- In some manuscripts, it may be found interchanged with Ⲅ (Chima) or even Ⲉ (Delta) due to scribal errors, or regional accents (one of the root causes of language evolution lol).
- The Djandja is from the Coptic alphabet — which was developed specifically to translate the Bible and liturgical texts from Greek and Hebrew into their native Egyptian tongue. As such, the script itself is often viewed as a "sacred vessel" for the Word of God — and it is if you're a Christian. Literally the only language like it, and it's just for the Bible.
- Gnostics believed the seven vowels of the Coptic/Greek alphabet corresponded to the seven planetary spheres. While ⲭ is a consonant, it was seen as a modifier of sorts that could change the vibration of the celestial sounds.
- Because ⲭ (Djandja) and Ⲅ (Chima) produce sibilant or affricate sounds, they were sometimes associated with the "breath of life" or the "hiss of the serpent" (Sophia/Wisdom). In Gnostic texts like the Pistis Sophia, specific letter combinations are used as "words of power" to pass through celestial gates.

Personally, I think it's a rabbit. I think it's Isis/Venus/Inanna/Asherah/Sophia snuck back into the most sacred language. Yeshua ben Yosef is the Sun, and she is the Moon (usagi). Together, they breathe the sacred breath of life that flows through us all.

So you don't like the meme. That's fuckin' fine kek. I don't like tumblr webcomics but I wouldn't make the argument that they're demonic. It's just shitty art that I don't like making retarded half-political points. It's not evil; I just don't like it.

It seems your problem stems from the fact that the artwork you don't enjoy is popular where you would like to spend time. That doesn't mean anything is being forced upon you. It means other people enjoy something you don't. Which can be a real pain in the ass but is ultimately mundane.

Also, the type of people to make deranged fucking weird ass disgusting memes have always come from this place. It's not an affront to your values specifically; it was ongoing far before you showed up. I'm not saying grotesque memes have ever been good. It's simply that it's always been a part of 4chan, exactly the same way as schizoposting (which is also not demonic)

The figure is depicted with a muscular build, showcasing well-defined muscles and a strong, defined chest. The figure's skin is dark, and the hair is styled in a way that suggests a halo, which is often associated with angels or deities. The figure's eyes are glowing, and the expression is one of intense focus or determination.

The figure is holding two celestial objects in its hands. On the left, the figure is holding a blue orb that resembles a planet, possibly representing the Earth. On the right, the figure is holding a black orb that could be interpreted as a black hole, a concept often associated with the concept of the universe or the cosmos.

The background of the image is a dark, stormy sky with white lightning bolts, adding a dramatic and powerful atmosphere to the artwork. The overall style of the image is dramatic and surreal, with a focus on the figure and the celestial objects it holds. The use of color and lighting creates a contrast between the figure and the celestial objects, further emphasizing the figure's importance in the composition.

The image is a black and white photograph featuring a man in profile. He appears to be in a contemplative or thoughtful pose, with his hands clasped together in front of him.

The man is wearing a suit, which suggests a formal or professional setting. The background is dark and out of focus, which puts the focus on the man. There are no discernible texts or logos in the image. The style of the photograph is realistic, with a shallow depth of field that blurs the background while keeping the man in sharp focus.

The image is a stylized cartoon-style illustration with a predominantly dark color palette. At the top, there is a large text in a bold, pink font that reads "VLÖDSON SAYS." Below this, there is a caricature of a person's face with exaggerated features, including a large nose, wide eyes, and a mouth open as if they are shouting or singing. The person's hair is styled in a messy manner, and they are wearing a necklace with a pendant that appears to be a heart.

The background of the image is divided into two sections. The upper section is a gradient of yellow and blue, while the lower section is a solid yellow. The person's face is surrounded by various stickers and badges, each with different text and symbols. The stickers include one with the text "BOSTOED MAJESTY AWARD," another with "ONE OF THE WORLD'S BEST VARIETY," and a third with "MAP RIGHTS." There are also stickers with the text "JERRY" and "MAP RIGHTS." The person's mouth is open, and they are holding a large, white object that resembles a pill or a piece of paper.

The overall style of the image is humorous and satirical, with a focus on the person's exaggerated features and the text that seems to be a play on words or a statement related to the "Map Rights" stickers. The use of bold colors and the exaggerated facial features contribute to the comedic tone of the image.

The character is wearing a dark blue shirt with a large, black X on the chest, and a red "AMERICA FIRST" cap on its head. The character is surrounded by a variety of stickers and logos, including one with the word "Hello" and another with the word "Muslim." The character is also holding a large, black, spiked club in its hand.

The background of the image is white, and there are speech bubbles with text that appear to be from different sources. One speech bubble reads, "I will become a terrorist with 42 eyes if I'm given the chance." Another speech bubble states, "I'm a Muslim, and I'm not afraid to say it. That's what Hitler wants."

The image also includes smaller elements such as a cartoonish character with a red bow, a character with a green background, and a character with a blue background. There are also various stickers and logos, including one with the word "Muslim" and another with the word "X." The overall style of the image is cartoonish and seems to be a parody or satirical representation of political and religious ideologies.

The image is a digital illustration featuring a stylized yellow character with a smiling face, wearing glasses and a hat. The character has a large, round head with a simple, cartoon-like design. It is holding a package of Hot Pockets in its left hand, which is depicted in a red and white color scheme. The character's eyes are closed, and the mouth is open in a friendly or content expression. The background is black, which contrasts with the bright yellow of the character and the red and white of the Hot Pockets package. The image has a playful and whimsical quality, likely intended to be humorous or satirical.

The image is a digital illustration featuring a stylized depiction of a person's face. The person has a large, menacing grin with sharp teeth, and their eyes are red with a glowing red light emanating from them. The person's hair is green and appears to be styled in a way that gives them a spiky appearance. The person is wearing a red shirt with a white collar and a green headband with a green bow on top. The background is black, and there is a white border around the image. At the bottom of the image, there is text that reads "4chan" followed by a number "15" and then "on trainere.local website."

The image is a black and white photograph featuring a statue of a muscular man in a contemplative pose. The man is seated on a stone pedestal, with his legs crossed and his hands resting on his knees. He is depicted with a beard and is wearing a sleeveless top. The statue appears to be made of a dark material, possibly bronze or a similar metal, and has a weathered appearance, suggesting it has been exposed to the elements for some time. The background shows a clear sky and a building with a pointed roof, indicating that the statue is located in an outdoor setting, possibly a public square or park. There is no text present in the image. The style of the photograph is straightforward, focusing on the statue without any additional context or background elements.

>I believe the sjak is a particular vulgar demon. I've watched its evolution and it doesn't even function as its original purpose anymore. It just shows up and forces itself upon everything. People don't even use it purely negatively anymore; they use it to depict things they consider positive in some smut sort of fashion; usually rape and genocide. There is something insidious about it. They were funny in the beginning when it was making fun of marvel funko pop guys and mask retards but now they have become this self parodying thing where they become more and more deranged and grotesque. The Chud is literally just some ugly murderer and troonjak is self explanatory yet when you use this website you are subjected to a barrage of these hideous images. And people go out of their way to make more and more unnecessary parodies and variations that just get worse and worse; art not for beauty or to be thought provoking but ugliness. Look at Antioch, a O9A sponsored shooting linked to Basedjak party. More and more of these edits are being made because they are spiritually malicious. I often see them linked to atheism and other destructive views. Urinating all over each others minds with this garbage.

mythological themes. The image is framed by a golden border, adding to its antique feel.

The image is a nighttime photograph capturing a serene scene of a full moon rising over a body of water. The moon is positioned in the center of the frame, casting a warm, golden glow that illuminates the surrounding area. The sky is dark, with a few scattered stars visible, suggesting it is either early morning or late evening. The water below mirrors the moon's light, creating a reflection that adds depth to the image. The horizon line is not visible, focusing the viewer's attention solely on the moon and the water. The overall mood of the image is tranquil and peaceful, with the moon's gentle illumination creating a sense of calm.

The image shows a black t-shirt laid flat on a surface. The t-shirt features a graphic design on the front. The design is a collage of various elements, including a cartoon-like depiction of a man with a surprised expression, a speech bubble with the text "I AM HAVING/I HAD A BOATING ACCIDENT AND/OR DRUG OVERDOSE," and a quote that reads, "I'M HAVING/I HAD A BOATING ACCIDENT AND/OR DRUG OVERDOSE. I'M NOT A FLYING MONSTER. I'M JUST A FLYING MONSTER." The text is in white and is arranged in a way that suggests a narrative or a story.

The t-shirt also includes text that reads "SENTENCED TO DEATH BY SUSPECTED MURDERER" and "WELCOME BLACK GUY TO HELL," along with a graphic of a skull and crossbones. The text is in white and is placed at the top of the design. The overall style of the image is casual and appears to be a promotional or merchandise item for a music artist named "RIP CIDDY."

The green frog character is seated at a desk with a red telephone to its left, and it appears to be engaged in a conversation. The blue shirt character is standing to the right of the desk, looking at the frog character with a neutral expression. The text in the image is in a casual, informal style, with the characters' dialogue appearing to be a conversation between the two characters. The text reads: "hello, it's the Jews, every single time? yes, always has been, thanks fren, didn't know that, ok bye." The style of the image is cartoonish and seems to be a humorous or satirical representation of a conversation between two characters.

The image is a digital illustration that depicts a scene of a creature with a long neck and a blue body, possibly a dinosaur, emerging from the water. The creature is illuminated by a bright light source, which appears to be a lantern or a similar device. The lantern is attached to a small, white, rectangular object that has a red light on top. The object is labeled "ALIEN" in white letters. The background is dark and features a blurred underwater scene with various aquatic plants and what appears to be a tree branch. The overall style of the image is surreal and fantasy-like, with a focus on the interaction between the creature and the lantern.

Sasquatch is real. I've stared in their eyes in broad daylight, 2025. Unknown sea reptiles are also real and there are unknown reptiles in lakes and rivers.

Why is this being so massively suppressed?

The image is a still from a movie or television show featuring a character in a dark, rainy setting. The character is wearing a mask with a white face and red eyes, which is commonly associated with the character Jason Voorhees from the Friday the 13th film series. The mask is detailed with holes for the eyes and a mouthpiece. The character is holding a large, curved, wooden object that appears to be a machete or a similar weapon. The character's attire includes a dark, possibly wet jacket and a dark, possibly wet shirt underneath. The background is dark and foggy, with a cross visible in the distance. The lighting is dim, emphasizing the character's face and the weapon. There are no discernible texts or logos in the image.

[5 / 4]The image is a black and white comic strip with a satirical tone. At the top, there is a question in bold text: "Why did you create this material world? It's evil and flawed."

Below this question, there is a large, stylized image of a cobra with a sunburst on its head, symbolizing power or enlightenment. The cobra is depicted with a fierce expression and is surrounded by rays emanating from the sunburst, suggesting a sense of divine or supernatural power.

In the center of the image, there is a smaller, stylized image of a coin with a sunburst on it, which is also surrounded by rays. The coin has a star and crescent moon, and the text "10,000 hours of eoteric tower and manly p hall videos" is written on it, indicating a reference to a video game or a video series.

At the bottom of the image, there is a speech bubble with the text "btw you should feel very unique and superior, this is the only way." This suggests a commentary on the uniqueness and superiority of the creator's work, which is humorously contrasted with the flawed material world depicted in the comic strip.

The overall style of the image is reminiscent of a meme or a satirical cartoon, with a focus on humor and irony. The use of the cobra and the sunburst, along with the text, creates a visual pun that plays on the idea of power and enlightenment, while the reference to video games and video series adds a layer of irony to the image.

The image displays the cover of a book titled "Beelzebub's Tales to His Grandson" by G. I. Gurdjieff. The cover features a decorative border with a pattern of floral and geometric designs in shades of red, gold, and green. The central part of the cover is dominated by a large, ornate, and symmetrical design that resembles a traditional Persian or Islamic pattern. The text is arranged in a traditional font, with the title in a larger, bold font at the top and the author's name in a smaller, regular font below it. The cover also includes a small, unobtrusive text at the bottom that reads "REVISED EDITION." The overall style of the image is traditional and decorative, with a focus on the intricate design elements.

The cover features a close-up photograph of a golden statue of a bearded man's head, which appears to be a historical or ancient artifact. The statue is adorned with a helmet and a headdress, and the background is a deep blue with a pattern that resembles a stylized tree or plant. The author's name, "STEPHEN MITCHELL," is written in white capital letters at the top of the cover. Below the author's name, the title of the book is displayed in a larger, bold font. There is a quote from a reviewer that reads, "Beneath the thick skin of the hero, like Socrates, lies a heart as tender as the heart of a poet. Like Socrates, he is a great man in the right hands." The cover also includes a small, circular logo with the text "New York Times" in white, indicating the publication's place of origin. The overall style of the image is a blend of historical and artistic elements, with a focus on the historical aspect of the book's subject matter.

[2 / 1]The image is a screenshot of a text document with a black and white color scheme. The text is in English and appears to be a part of a document or report, possibly related to a philosophical or spiritual topic. The document is titled "THE LAW OF MENTIFICATION, CLEARLY EXPLAINED IN DECLASSIFIED CIA DOCUMENT." The text is organized into paragraphs, with the first paragraph being the largest and the last paragraph being the smallest. The text is dense and contains a mix of English and possibly other languages, as indicated by the presence of non-Latin characters.

The content of the text discusses the concept of manifesting desires and goals using the mind, with a focus on achieving desired objectives through the use of thought patterns. It mentions the importance of establishing a clear and focused intention, and the role of the individual's perception in achieving this. The text also touches on the concept of the expanded awareness of the mind, which is described as a state of expanded awareness that creates an environment for the mind to manifest.

The document appears to be a scholarly or academic work, as indicated by the formal language and the structured format of the text. The text is written in a way that is likely intended to be read and understood by a reader familiar with the subject matter. The document is likely intended for a specific audience, such as a class or a group of individuals who are interested in the philosophical or spiritual aspects of manifesting desires and goals.

>Useful tips before posting:

- If you're a reader, post that you're offering readings and what information is required from the querent; the same goes for trading.

- Look for posts to determine if there's an active reader, what's needed and before posting, check if they finished reading already.

- Some readers will refuse to do certain readings - respect that choice. Do not harass readers if your query is refused/skipped. We do our best to maintain chill and good vibes.

- Traders should respect that a traded read will be granted, as per an agreement of trade. Free readers have the option of picking their queries.

- Bullshit queries get bullshit answers. Vague queries get vague answers.

- Making an AQ (air query) by not addressing a reader, in particular, is possible but doesn't guarantee an answer.

- Avoid making the same query repeatedly and/or to different readers in a short period of time, as this may lead to more confusion.

- Provide feedback when applicable and be considerate to the reader. We're a growing community, many readers are starting and need to know what they are doing right or wrong. Let's help each other to improve.

You are stuck indeed, you can plant seeds for future interactions as much as you want, show care, be there, pay attention, listen and generally doing your part but this person simply is not giving themselves the chance to experience this, to experience you. The best you can do is walk away for now, just for now, give space to the situation, who knows, things might change but give things their time to develop, if this person is meant to be for you they will show interest, and I'll give it to you straight, you are obsessed, it is going to be hard to let it go, but eventually you will be able to, and once you do you will be able to see the situation more clearly and actually be able to make better judgement on this person and if they are worthy of you

But ! Cards advice against this, do not engage directly , not really the time for that, you can't loom after her without first being able to look after yourself, you rest you meditate, you withdraw to give space for things to cool down

You are most susceptible to intrusion because of your bond with her. Literally picture you cutting cords, attachments, visualise it physically, cut those connections, physically, mentally until you allow yourself not to feel them, allow them to not be there, once you reestablish true neutrality you will be in a much better position to reestablish your defenses more effectively

Well from the get go this whole thing has create a great deal of instability in you, be it a matter of money or emotions this hit you, but it is also an opportunity for you to move forwards it might take a bit of time but you will start feeling that inner call soon enough that tells you where to go and cards say that you should follow it as it will lead you to new connections either romantic, business, work, or new close friendship. Something that will take you out of the frame of mind you are on right now, there is no need for you to look to get back at anyone for what happened, no rash actions, or words, you look after yourself, learn from the experience and let it be. Slowly but surely you will start to move away from this, for your best, not anyone else. But this ends in a win for you anon

The image displays a circular emblem with a symmetrical design. The emblem features a central, large, yellow star with a smaller, central, yellow circle at its center. The star is composed of eight segments, each with a distinct yellow outline and a central yellow dot. The segments are arranged in a radial pattern, with the star's outer edges forming a semi-circular border. The background of the emblem is a deep blue, providing a stark contrast to the yellow elements. The emblem's design is symmetrical, with the star and circle appearing to be part of a larger, circular structure. There are no texts or additional elements present in the image. The style of the emblem is reminiscent of traditional or symbolic designs, often found in heraldry or religious iconography.

I'm trying to figure out why this chick basically ghosted me, she gave an excuse being busy with school yet she uploads tik toks and interacts with the comments alot. She even told me in the past she would never ghost anyone lol. Before she ghosted me she kept mentioning her bf, which I knew was long distance despite her hiding that. Feels like I got chewed up and spit out by a succubus (it took a month of talking/flirting w/ her before she awkwardly mentioned she even had a bf on a call, when the call turned into a video chat she got super nervous and gave me alot of compliments) I kinda wanna block her because she really screwed up my dopamine receptors but I keep drawing the moon when I ask if blocking is a good idea.

I originally had two full green text posts typed out explaining everything in detail but I figured cutting to the chase would be easier to post.

I keep drawing lovers, world and devil and justice when I ask about her.

Does she like me? Lovers

Does she think about me World.

What did she think? Devil...

Also Justice card also keeps coming here and there. These 4 cards.

And she is still my crush, and I still didn't get much chance to get closer to her.

Can you help me?

Keep in mind horary is not best for such descriptive questions

Your current job is L10, so mercury, and the next one is shown by the ruler of the next sign, which is the Moon

Moon is in better situation, since Mercury is slowing down towards retrograde, is in it's detriment and in the 6th house. The Moon is stronger despite being peregrine, and also in the 7th house, which could mean the focus of this new work on other people. All in all, looks like the new job is better, but still not ideal Side note - the moon is applying to Saturn after it changes signs; it's possible that this new gig will be short lived. Take this note with a grain of salt though

Everything is fated and nothing is fated, anon. Everything is fated in the sense that that which must be will be and always has been. Nothing is fated in the sense that the choices that we make direct the present reality in which we live.

It is not tarot that is not guaranteed, it is that our interpretation of the future is flawed, and often it is the case that it only becomes clear in hindsight, even with visions.

If it is of any comfort, I can say that I have found it often to be the case that that which I have wished most for had turned out to be a curse, and that which I had wished to avoid actually turned out to set me on the right track.

And so it goes, as Vonnegut used to say.

May you get what you and want what you get. There's that Thirteen Conversations About One Thing film. It is not the happiest thing in the world but it does convey this certain truth.

Easier said than done. In truth, I do not believe I have ever been able to use the fact that I knew what was to happen to my advantage when the predicted moment rolled around (because I was never able to change what transpired). As I get older, I now understand what my mother meant when she had said that she does not view her (far superior) ability to predict that which is to be as a boon.

It is because it is pointless when you cannot prevent what is to be. In fact, it might be even worse than not knowing which is something I have been mulling over lately and also why I have been less active here and elsewhere. To be honest, I am generally feeling the futility in all endeavor which is either enlightenment or despair lol

Well, I can't really tell whether you should or not but I can tell you what the chart says about the property

It's signified by Saturn, since it rules the 4th house. It is in fall in Aries. This means something with the condition of the property is off. Fire sign could suggest something's wrong with the insulation, or possibly the walls / heating. It's conjunct Neptune, so maybe mold/dampness?

The price is shown by the Moon, ruler of the 10th house. It seems fair, since it's peregrine. Also, looks like it's also peregrine in the next sign, so it doesn't seem like you'll be able to negotiate it any further.

At the center of the chart, there is a large circle with a number "R" in the middle, surrounded by the zodiac signs. The numbers and symbols are arranged in a grid-like pattern, with each number and symbol corresponding to a specific zodiac sign. The numbers are written in a bold, serif font, while the symbols are in a smaller, sans-serif font.

The chart appears to be a representation of a zodiac wheel, with the numbers and symbols indicating the positions of the zodiac signs in the sky. The arrangement of the zodiac signs around the central number "R" suggests that the chart is likely used for astrological purposes, possibly to predict the positions of the zodiac signs in the sky at a specific moment.

The image does not contain any text or additional graphics, and the focus is solely on the astrological chart and its arrangement of zodiac signs. The style of the image is straightforward and uses a limited color palette, with the dark background and gold-colored elements providing contrast to the chart.

Huh, when we did a video chat she mentioned having a boyfriend but she spoke of him like he wasn't around, when the call did turn into an actual video chat she got super nervous and kept giving me compliments and mirroring my movements. I found out it was a long distance boyfriend but she never got around to telling me that. Our last couple of conversations she kept mentioning him until finally ghosting me. I finally found a chick in real life to talk to about it and she said she probably felt really guilty. Aside from the boyfriend thing it felt like I was in.

The image displays a astrological chart with a dark background and a grid of numbers and symbols arranged in a circular pattern. The chart is divided into twelve sections, each marked with a number and a symbol, representing the zodiac signs. The zodiac signs are arranged in a clockwise direction around the chart.

At the top of the chart, the zodiac signs are listed in a clockwise order from the top left to the bottom right, with the numbers corresponding to each sign. The numbers are written in a bold, capitalized font, and the signs are depicted in a smaller, lowercase font.

The chart also includes a series of numbers and symbols that are likely to represent the positions of the planets and other celestial bodies. These numbers and symbols are arranged in a similar manner to the zodiac signs, with the numbers and symbols in a clockwise direction from the top left to the bottom right.

The image is a digital representation of a traditional astrological chart, commonly used to study the positions of celestial bodies and their effects on human life. The use of numbers and symbols indicates that the chart is likely used for predictive astrology, where the positions of celestial bodies are analyzed to predict future events and outcomes.

Your signficator, Venus, is in a fertile sign. It recently left combustion and is under the sunbeams, but also very close to the north node. Your cosignficator, the moon, is applying directly to Saturn, which rules the 5th house. All things considered I think there is a chance for it. I wish you all the best

The chart is divided into twelve sections, each representing a different zodiac sign, and a central circle with the zodiac signs and their corresponding positions. The zodiac signs are arranged in a clockwise direction around the central circle.

At the top of the chart, the zodiac signs are listed in a vertical column, with the signs of Aries, Taurus, Gemini, Cancer, Leo, Virgo, Libra, Scorpio, Sagittarius, Capricorn, Aquarius, and Pisces. Each sign is accompanied by a symbol, and the positions of the signs are indicated by numbers ranging from 1 to 12.

The central circle contains the zodiac signs and their positions, with the positions marked by numbers ranging from 1 to 12. The numbers are aligned with the zodiac signs, and the positions are indicated by the numbers 1 to 12.

The chart also includes additional symbols and numbers, such as the number 11, which is likely a reference to the position of the Sun in the zodiac. The numbers 1 to 12 are used to indicate the positions of the zodiac signs, and the numbers 1 to 12 are used to indicate the positions of the zodiac signs.

The image is a digital representation of a traditional astrological chart, and it is likely used for educational or personal astrology purposes. The chart is designed to show the positions of the zodiac signs and their relationships to each other, as well as to the Sun, Moon, and other celestial bodies.

Yeah my closest friends were telling me immediately that I should've flirted harder with her but it just didn't feel morally right after she awkwardly mentioned having a boyfriend. So given your reading their first instinct was probably correct and she just gave up on me and started mentioning her boyfriend as a way to take the moral highground since she obviously liked me. My own past present and future tarot draw from her matches up i think, I got the devil for how she viewed me in the past. I've gotten that card for chicks I just wanted to bang. Of course maybe she just did feel guilty, I suppose I may never know for certain. Thanks for the reading though.

Listen things are going better than you think, there is stability and contentment and i think that is what is freaking you out. You might be feeling that a lack of strong resistance is synonymous with stagnation. And I'll be honest i think the same. But your mind is spinning and you need to let it rest for a bit, stop the overthinking and let it sit for a while you dont need all the answers now and that is ok, clarity of purpose comes after quiet contemplation. Let yourself feel whatever it is that you are going through if it is anxiety, then feel it and understand it. Be less mental about it. Whennyour mind is at easy you'll have a clearer picture of what you want next and how you will obtain it, follow what makes you passionate not just what gives you comfort, go out there and explore new stuff, break the routine and let yourself be taken in new directions.

Iching
> hex 9 line 3 and 6 surrender > changes to 60 limitation

There is no real blockage that can withstand submission, even when things seem stuck, withdrawing to contemplate and learn will allow you to see new paths that you were not able to see before. Not by pushing but by restraining, not by force but with gentleness. Stop listen and surrender to the process, in this time communication is paramount so communicate what you feel, but also listen. You have what you need, so there is no need to press for more at this time. And the change goes towards respectong the limits of the situation you are in.

So all in all the advice i get for you is one of quiet contentment for now, appreciate what you have and let yourself navigate forwards from heart and this will give you the mental clarity that you need

If there is anything in specific that troubles you we can see how this applies to you

The image shows a black and white cat with a distinctive pattern of black spots on its body. The spots are irregularly shaped and are distributed across the cat's fur, creating a unique visual effect. The cat is sitting on a dark, possibly leather, surface, which contrasts with the lighter fur of the cat. The cat's eyes are wide open, and it appears to be looking directly at the camera, giving the impression of a curious or attentive expression. The image is a close-up shot, focusing on the cat's face and body, with no other objects or background details visible. There is a watermark or logo in the bottom right corner of the image that reads "NTD," which is likely a reference to the brand or company associated with the image. The style of the image is candid and naturalistic, capturing a moment in the life of the cat.

Four of swords and temperance says yes, give them some space for a few days or so. Avoid heavy talks and focus on your own routine for a bit.

Well, selling eliminated a cash flow issue. I would have had to get roommates to make it work and the place is in bad shape so I might end up with bum tenants who don't pay. Then I'd be even more stressed. I think the main reason for moving should be centered around getting out of a neighborhood and town I didn't feel comfortable in. That can pay for itself in many ways. I just hope it doesn't hurt my sales job to move, if you might be able to check. Can trade again.

The image is a candid photograph of a cat lying in a sink. The cat is wearing a sombrero with a colorful pattern, and a matching scarf. The cat's eyes are closed, and it appears to be resting or sleeping. The cat is holding a bottle of tequila in its paws, which is partially visible. The sink has a silver faucet and a soap dispenser. The background is a white countertop with a sink and a silver faucet. There is a label on the bottle of tequila that reads "NACHO LAGULA" and "100% Blue Agave." The style of the image is informal and playful, with a focus on the cat's relaxed demeanor and the unusual combination of elements in the scene.

The image is a close-up photograph of a cat with its mouth open, appearing to be drinking from a cigarette. The cat has a gray and black striped coat and is looking directly at the camera. The cigarette is partially inserted into the cat's mouth, and the brand "Hitler" is visible on the cigarette box. The box is red and white with the brand name in black. The background is blurred, but it appears to be an indoor setting with a carpeted floor. There is also some text on the cigarette box, which is in a non-Latin script, possibly Urdu, and reads "Hitler King Size Filler." The style of the image is candid and humorous, with a focus on the unexpected juxtaposition of a cat drinking from a cigarette.

The image is a digital graphic with a night sky as the background. The sky is filled with stars and a bright, milky-white galaxy that appears to be in the process of being captured by a camera. The foreground features a landscape with a field of tall, dry grass and a few trees. The text "The Most High God" is overlaid on the image in a bold, sans-serif font. The style of the image is reminiscent of a digital art piece or a promotional graphic, with a focus on the celestial theme.

You will somehow find your way into an AI movie or CGI generated movie as a female model for the AI or CGI to capture. You will act out the scenes but the PC will blend it with digital layers and will mask your real face. You will be the "actress" of that movie or series of TV shows. I don't know how you'll find your way into this market or niche. Keep posting? or keep scouting and eventually you'll get it? I wouldn't call you famous as there will be many people like you, but you'll at least make an appearance in some kind of media film or feature. FYI people won't really stop you on the streets as the AI CGI stuff will mask your real face. You'll be like a minus celeb. BTW why would you ever want fame? its one of the worst things to want on this earth, even famous people hate fame. puke

Excellent query, THIS is what scrying should be all about, bravo, you have tonight's best query right here ladies and gentlemen.

You should be strategically planning what to do for the next 5 and 10 years and then picture 20 years down the line and work towards those goals. Find a few dreams you want and start to close in on them. 2-3 dreams should be sufficient. Did you ever want to become a singer? Did you ever want to be a millionaire? A mother? Start to work towards those goals. Make a list of things or simply get help from websites or AI (I know AI sucks but its better than nothing) and start to check off everything one by one.

I see diplomacy and a young woman start to work towards knowing how to handle being around high placed people and dealing with diplomatic measures.

Really good energies for this actually, 9 of cups and the ace of cups fall from the deck

Queen of pents rx, 10 of pents, 7 of cups rx

You might be doubting your ability to enact changes due to where you are financially and being comfortable but you have the inspiration and the solid foundations to look for more and to grow, but i think where you are already at right now is starting to feel small for you . If the place where you are s providing you the stability you need you are probably too comfortable here and that is what is closing options for you. But if you open up to the idea of change you will have a plenitude of opportunities that you can exploit. Whichever way you go things look positive and well settled but open for more to come in >>41997267

Well what changes are you looking for ? Where is your energy going ?

6 of wands rx, the moon, 4 of pentacles rx

I see lots of potential but fear of change and blocked energies. You need to let go of your anxieties and actually get yourself out there, be seen, express yourself

Seek the things that you want and they will come to you, it is important that you have vision of where you want things to project and where you want to be and work towards it, otherwise your mind will simply stop you and nothing will ever change.

Right now the changes you want to see are on hold but you are much closer than you think if only you dare and open up to the idea of going for more. The limitations you are facing stem from low self-esteem and i think you are also having issues with money but both thongs are addressable, one little consistent action at a time will take you where you want to be

The image is a collage of various elements, predominantly featuring a cat with a surprised expression and a telephone in its paws. The cat is positioned in the center of the image, with its eyes wide open and its mouth slightly open, as if it's reacting to something. The telephone is held by a hand, which is partially visible, suggesting the hand is in the process of making a call.

In the top left corner, there is a rope with a loop, which is commonly associated with a hanging or death symbol. The background is plain white, which contrasts with the colorful elements in the foreground.

The text in the image is in Chinese and reads "死神降临" which translates to "Death God's Arrival." This phrase is commonly used in Chinese culture to describe the arrival of a deity or a supernatural being.

The overall style of the image is humorous and surreal, with the juxtaposition of the cat's surprised expression with the telephone and the text, which playfully combines elements of the supernatural and everyday life.

Think about it this way, if you meet someone new and you are trying to make things work with them. How would you come across if you are asking them to be there available at your level of liking from the get go, where do expectations meet reality and where are you being objective over idealising ?

Is the face of someone who is impatient and only wants immediate results the best face you want to present forwards ?

You need to give time for relationships to develop, to actually allow the other person to meet you where they can and where they want. Everyone has a different set of idealised expectations in their head in base of what they want in a partner, if you let this be the guiding lines for how you relate to others then you are in for disappointment because really reality seldom meets expectations. Everyone is different and every head is its own world

The hiero , page of cups reversed king of cups two of swords, queen of swords reversed

Maybe you rely too much on traditional pathways or societal expectations or the expectations and pathways of others and you're just taking the route of train tracks that others have already built for you to take instead of making your own path and maybe this is constraining you and maybe this even is stirring some sort of resentment in you where you don't honour your own emotional sensitivity and creativities maybe you want to act a certain way but that is not the expectation of you or maybe that's all you know to be because of what you've been told or what's normal for everyone else or normal for every NPC, you know what I mean and there's a sense of moodiness that might come of you or frustration because of not honouring this page of cups within you or it might just mean you're just a little too emotionally immature and with things like that maybe the queen of swords rx means you avoid thinking or you might be excessively cold and detached or intellectual and rationalising everything or someone might've very harshly judge your intellect but you might avoid it now and it also might be causing you to be detached from realities and in some sort of stalemates and in some sort of denial of something with that two of swords. Well, 3 women came up in my spread, the first a very mental person, hard to gauge her feelings but will open up to you, will have a lot of interest in you and who knows this can develop into a lot of things

The queen of cups, fair haired, very emotional, but in the end emotionally closed due to grief and hurt but you will have a lot of potential together

The queen of pentacles, a woman of deep feelings and of very physical love, you will bond with her easily and form a partnership almost by osmosis, you will be in each others lives without much effort, lots of potential there

You will marry the one who alchemises the best with you, the one who stays and doesn't become impatient, and where there is mutual support and understanding. The one who makes you grow out of your fears and limitations

That was a really interesting spread I'll say

The image is a close-up photograph of a cat's face. The cat has a gray and white coat with a mix of black and gray markings. Its eyes are a striking yellow color, and it has a pink tongue sticking out. The cat's whiskers are white and fluffy, and its ears are pointed. The background is blurred, but it appears to be a natural setting with green foliage.

There are no texts or discernible brands in the image. The style of the image is realistic, focusing on the cat's features and expression.

Lots of overthinking and ruminating anon, wathever troubles you i assure you it not that bad, in love i see soemone coming in into your life or someone who is already there and gives you a lot of support and care.

work if feeling off for you tho, perhaps it is not resonating with you anymore, or there is a particularly difficult period coming in, or maybe you are just not feeling the passion but it is a temporary dip thing can get better and you will get back to top of your game. Money seems like it will take a bright upturn regardless fiannces seem like they will be really improving for you, perhaps after a period of over spending.

But you yourself will be triving, lots of socialising or you will feel sure of yourself and charismatic. Looks like you will have really positive time ahead

I read my cards intuitively, in your case those cards fell in a bunch, i took the first card and asked what do you want to tell me ? 10 of cups, long lasting union, happiness and the happy ever after. Then i feel there is more than one person in the cards. I feel the first before turning them around and something tells me this is person number 1 and in appeared the first queen , then the next two i felt them as the next person and indeed it was another queen, and the surprise third, it was a spread that just felt right as it appeared and talked very clearly to me

Well rather positively i would say, there are situation you are heading out off that have kept you hanging for a while and that is good that energies are starting to flow again, work and finances are going to flow really well for you, looks like you are thinking of trying some new things and the enrgies are really positive if you do dare and go for it. Family matters seem like they will be a bit complicated , seems like an argument with someone but it wont be the end of the world. Finaly you yourself need to stablish a bit of structure and discipline in your life for things to flow better in the common months

The image shows a collection of tarot cards laid out on a textured surface, possibly carpeted. The cards are arranged in a grid-like pattern, with each card occupying its own square. The cards are of a standard size, with a white background and a border that includes a color scheme of yellow, blue, and red.

The tarot cards feature various figures and symbols, including a figure with a crown, a figure with a sword, a figure with a staff, and a figure with a bird. The figures are depicted in a stylized manner, with exaggerated features and vibrant colors. The tarot cards are arranged in a way that suggests they are part of a spread, with the cards facing outward from the center.

The image is a close-up photograph, focusing on the tarot cards and their details. There are no visible texts on the tarot cards, and the image does not provide any information about the specific meanings or interpretations of the cards. The style of the image is straightforward and appears to be a straightforward photograph of the tarot cards without any artistic filters or alterations.

Well listen the fear is not about a lack of skill, perceived or realiced, or a lack of drive, spark or passion it is simply a matter of self-esteem and how you perceive yourself not as someone capable but as someone of weakness. And erroneous assessment because i am seeing the opposite here.

The fix you need the inner critic the one that tells you what if i am not enough for me or someone else. You need to stop and reassess yourself, a lot of this is stuff that you carry from childhood it is important that you see the root causes of your way of thinking, the disappointments the hurts where do they come from and why are they still there. You need to understand the root causes so that you can work on them, you feel you are not social enough ? Well that is an easy fix, there is always ways to put yourself out there and meet new people to give you some self confidence, or if you feel you lack skills or knowledge then identify exactly what and why and start upskillig, there is plenty of stuff out there you can use that you wont even need to pay for there are so many avenues you can adresss these shortcomings and the funny thing is, that it would all be easy for you if you were clear on it, once you get the ball rolling you would be gaining momentum like mad because your archetype the page of wands is just that, it is just that you are stoped in a standstill out of fear of the unknown, once you dissipate it you are going and there is no one to stop you. And if it doesn't move then you are simply applying force at the wrong lever, stop wrighting yourself against some arbitrary standard, you learn and you act according to who you are and the path you follow will take you where you want to be at your own phase, what matters is that you keep moving consistently towards your goals

So what are your major problems ?

Well straight away, mental systems that keep you tied down where you are, either a toxic way of thinking of yourself as if i can't then why even try or even outright addictions, be it videogames, chronic procrastination or you name it, but there are behaviours, patterns and habits that you have developed that just keep you anchored down where you are. Past experiences have also left you weary, perhaps heartbreaks, or failures, it all created this mental defensive circle that keeps away the adventure you crave because your subconscious is telling you that failure is imminent and you need to be careful, if you can logically dissociate yourself from this frame of mind things will flow easier for you. Then you have deception, avoidance and self sabotage you literally work against yourself to keep up these systems, to effectively move forwards you need to be brutally sincere with yourself and actually work against this pattern to allow yourself to move forwards.

And finally , i think you are already aware of all these things to an extent, i know you are trying to move forwards, you are trying to put all this emotional weight down, but you don't know how, but the fact that you are aware of it is a major win for you, you have already done the hard part of accepting that there is something in you that is not working and you want to change it. Well here i think we have identified a good set of things which are holding you back and making you fear moving forwards.

It is internal work, it is not easy to start, to be honest to actually self realise where this things are triggering but once you do, again, you get the ball rolling and you build momentum like mad. So carry on anon, you can completely achieve what you are looking for, you just do one thing at a time, consistently one thing that works for you a day and before you notice it you will be going places you never thought you would be in

Gods speed anon, you got this

I think you need to work on honing the page energy into the kings energy with that transition in between and maybe try and be more exploratory and adventurous and more exploratory toward life and avenues of opportunity whereby those avenues turn into the avenue for you to sail away from any troubles and you need to work on being strong in these transition phases and transitioning your thoughts or maybe even physical movement to a place of better healing or maybe just really needs to work on being able to move past certain things for sure and in doing so in overcoming certain things you will reach your matured potential of this charismatic visionary leader able to put his energy in visions into reality and inspire others as well through such leadership but I think you have to consolidate those 10 of swords somehow and maybe just transitioning and transitioning into the king energy would benefit you maybe protect yourself more from overwhelming harsh things. Maybe you have to learn to integrate those swords somehow and resurrect yourself or use them for something instead of keeping them inside of you or make peace with this brutal end and move away from it, don't get so overwhelmed or think too much or let others put those swords in you and avoid keeping them in for long if they are

It wouldn't be a huge catastrophe. Such things would be avoided and such things will be reconciled and people will move on but in the end it will always be known that you guys just might be too different in temperament and it would be like oil and water and if things do get well, I mean that's just it's still gonna be there you know. Boundaries needed and clarity but thinks will always have undercurrent of shakiness and misalignment even after reconcile

5 of cups and 9 of swords both speak of internal struggle between rational thinking and emotional stability.

In one sense he most likely thinks negatively or harbors on loss or misalignment, cannot see the good because he is caught up in the bad 9 of swords often times points to anxiety, fear, sadness, but is often times a matter of their own thought pattern, not necessarily because everything around them is bad.

The tweet is accompanied by a photo of three individuals wearing blue shirts with yellow text and logos. The text in the tweet reads, "I don't know if I should post it but I have nowhere else to vent. In our last conversations, he talked a lot about heights and I even talked to him about this sub. He was 5'2", but school made him shorter at the time. I was the only friend, so it's hitting hard. I think heightism was one of the reasons for his suicide. I think the world is fucked up bro, I think I will be the only one outside his family to attend the funeral." The tweet is marked as "vent" and has a green arrow pointing to the text "vent". The image is a combination of text and a photograph, with the text being the main focus and the photograph providing context to the story.

The image is a close-up photograph of a human face with a large, exaggerated smile. The face appears to be made of a translucent, possibly plastic material, giving it a somewhat unnatural and cartoonish appearance. The skin is smooth and the eyes are closed, but the mouth is wide open, revealing white teeth. The background is dark, which contrasts with the light color of the face, making it stand out prominently. There are no texts or discernible objects in the image. The style of the image is reminiscent of a meme or a humorous photograph, often used to create a light-hearted or humorous mood.

The image is a meme featuring a stylized depiction of a blue-skinned, black-haired woman with a wide-open mouth, appearing to be in a state of intense emotion. She is wearing a necklace and earrings, and her hair is styled in a way that suggests movement. The woman is surrounded by a circular border that contains various elements such as a map, a compass, and a compass rose, suggesting a theme of navigation or travel.

Overlaying the image is a text that reads, "This is samsara we suffer here. Take yo sensitive ass back to Nirvana." The text is in white, bold font, and is placed at the top of the image, with the word "samsara" in a larger font size than the rest of the text. The text is overlaid on the image in a way that it appears to be a caption or a message, possibly referencing the concept of samsara, which is a concept in Buddhism that refers to the cycle of birth, life, death, and rebirth.

The overall style of the image is humorous and satirical, with a focus on the use of text to convey a message. The meme uses visual elements to convey a message about the nature of suffering and the concept of Nirvana, which is a central theme in Buddhism.

The use of a map and compass in the background reinforces the idea of travel and exploration, which is a common theme in the meme.

The image is a high-resolution aerial photograph of a coastal area. The foreground shows a rocky coastline with a series of small, rocky outcrops and a few small, sandy areas. The water is a deep blue, with small waves visible on the surface. In the middle ground, there is a curved concrete breakwater with a series of small, concrete piers connected by a series of concrete walkways. The walkways are lined with small, white buoys. The breakwater curves around the coastline, with the water extending out to the right and left of the structure.

In the background, the coastline continues with a series of smaller islands and a larger island with a prominent rock formation. The sky is overcast, and the water is calm. There are no visible texts or discernible human figures in the image. The style of the image is realistic, with a focus on the natural landscape and the man-made structures.

The image is a digital illustration featuring a young man wearing a black t-shirt with a vibrant graphic design. The design is a stylized depiction of a green, monstrous creature with sharp teeth and sharp claws, set against a fiery background that suggests a chaotic or destructive scene. The creature appears to be surrounded by various colorful shapes and objects, including what looks like a red and purple heart, a blue and white striped flag, and a yellow and purple striped flag. The background is filled with bright, fiery colors that create a sense of intensity and energy. The man's face is not visible, focusing the viewer's attention solely on the graphic design on his t-shirt. The overall style of the image is bold and dynamic, with a focus on the contrast between the dark t-shirt and the bright, fiery background.

The image is a stylized cartoon drawing with a white background. At the top, there is a phrase in green and black text that reads "DONK DONK DOWN." Below this, there is a black and white illustration of a character that appears to be a humanoid alien with large, round eyes, a small mouth, and a wide, open mouth. The character is depicted in a dynamic pose, with one arm raised and the other extended outward, as if in the middle of a movement or action. The character's body is outlined in black, and the face is outlined in white. The character's head is tilted to the side, and its eyes are wide open. The character's body is slightly tilted to the right, and it appears to be in motion. There is a small yellow star above the character's head, and a yellow explosion is depicted to the left of the character, suggesting a burst or explosion. The overall style of the image is cartoonish and expressive, with a focus on action and movement.

[66 / 10]The image is a screenshot of a Twitter post by Donald J. Trump. The post is a text message that appears to be a statement or announcement. The text is in a bold, sans-serif font and is centered on the image. The background of the image is white, and there is a small, circular logo in the top left corner with the text "Donald J. Trump" in the center. The Twitter handle "@realDonaldTrump" is also visible in the top right corner of the image.

The text in the tweet reads: "Based on the tremendous interest shown, I will be directing the Secretary of War, and other relevant Departments and Agencies, to begin the process of identifying and releasing Government files related to alien and extraterrestrial life. Unidentified aerial phenomena (UAP), and unidentified flying objects (UFOs), and any and all other information connected to these highly complex, but extremely interesting and important, matters. GOD BLESS AMERICA!"

The style of the image is a straightforward representation of a tweet, with the text being the main focus. The image does not contain any other discernible elements or graphics.

They're not opposing ops they're part of the same disclosure. If the audience think something is being buried, or it's scandalously being leaked out around infighting and rolling heads, they will pay more attention. Meanwhile the Epstein rollout is designed to normalize and discredit the evils therein. Those files subtly confirm their allegiance and routes of access to the actual NHI so now the (((UFO))) blue beam card will be played to catch the opposing polarity in the same net. But both will progress the public's understanding and acceptance of the real truths hidden behind the veiled psyop.

my point is that most of it is indeed noise, they did it on purpose.

if you pick any random one you are more than likely gonna end up on some worthless junk with no value, that's why it's important for as many people as possible to look at them to find the actual valuable info out of the noise, which is most of the files, only a small percentage of them actually contain incriminating evidence or other useful info. they on purpose wanted to drown the valuable info in the noise.

The image is a meme featuring a person with a black mask and hood, holding two guns. The person is seated on a chair with a green background. The meme includes a text overlay that reads, "All of your problems are because you are not drinking enough water." The text is in a bold, white font against a yellow background. The overall style of the image is a digital filter or alteration of a photograph, with a grainy texture and a pixelated effect. The meme seems to be a commentary on the importance of hydration in maintaining one's health and well-being.

When the spinning ball-Earth is finally exposed worldwide for the 400+ year deception it was, Earth's entire population will suddenly be faced with the reality that every government, every space agency, university, secret society, religious organization, mainstream and alternative media outlet have ALL been duplicitous in propping up a monstrous manipulation to fleece and control the masses. The resulting mass mental exodus away from the control system is exactly what humanity needs. Once the flat Earth truth gets out, these lying politicians, spokesmen, reporters and teachers suddenly change from being heralded voices of authority to being ridiculed, shunned and denounced as they deserve. Once the flat Earth truth gets out, these governments, universities, media outlets and other entangled organizations which have long been hard at work weaving this multi-generational ball-Earth myth, suddenly and completely lose all credibility. Once the truth of our flat Earth gets out, so does the truth of these few elite families/societies who have kept this most important and fundamental reality from us for these hundreds of years! Essentially, once the flat Earth truth gets out, so does every other important truth by proxy, because this "mother-of-all-conspiracies" holds under its umbrella literally ALL of the other conspiracies, and exposes them.

The image is a stylized cartoon or comic book illustration. It features two anthropomorphic figures facing each other, with one of them speaking. The figure on the left has long black hair and is wearing a loincloth, while the figure on the right has long dark hair and is also wearing a loincloth. Both figures have expressive faces and are looking at each other.

The background is a fiery, chaotic scene with flames and smoke, suggesting a dramatic or intense moment. There are several other figures in the background, some of whom are also wearing loincloths. The text in the speech bubble on the left figure's face reads, "IT MAY NOT BE A PERFECT SYSTEM BUT IT'S STILL THE BEST ONE THERE IS."

The speech bubble on the right figure's face reads, "IT MAY NOT BE A PERFECT SYSTEM BUT IT'S STILL THE BEST ONE THERE IS."

The style of the image is reminiscent of traditional comic book art, with bold lines and a focus on action and dialogue. The colors are warm and vibrant, with a palette that includes shades of orange, red, and yellow. The overall mood of the image is intense and dramatic, with a sense of urgency or conflict.

Experiments on Basic Metaprograms of Existence [and control-agency] Anonymous Fri 20 Feb 2026 09:46:10 No.41999758 ViewReplyOriginalReport

Preliminary to the experiments in changing basic beliefs, many experiments with the profound physical isolation and solitude situation were carried out over a period of several years. These experiences were followed by combining the LSD-25 state and the physical isolation state in a second period of several years.

Basic Belief [about controllership] No. 2

The subject sought beings other than himself, not human, in whom he existed and who control him and other human beings. Thus the subject found whole new universes containing great varieties of beings, some greater than himself, some equal to himself, and some lesser than himself.

Those greater than himself were a set which was so huge in space-time as to make the subject feel as a mere mote in their sunbeam, a single microflash of energy in their time scale, my forty-five years are but an instant in their lifetime, a single thought in their vast computer, a mere particle in their assemblages of living cognitive units. He felt he was in the absolute unconscious of these beings. He experienced many more sets all so much greater than himself that they were almost inconceivable in their complexity, size and time scales.

Anonymous Fri 20 Feb 2026 09:46:47 No.41999762 Report

Those beings which were close to the subject in complexity-size-time were dichotomized into the evil ones and good ones. The evil ones [potentially controlling, moral agents] (subject said) were busy with purposes so foreign to his own that he had many near-misses and almost fatal accidents in encounters with them; they were almost totally unaware of his existence and hence almost wiped him out, apparently without knowing it. The subject says that the good ones thought good thoughts to him, through him, and to one another. They were at least conceivably human and humane. He interpreted them as alien yet friendly. They were not so alien as to be completely removed from human beings in regard to their purposes and activities.

Some of these beings (the subject reported) are programming us in the long term. They nurture us. They experiment on us. They control the probability of our discovering and exploiting new science. He reports that discoveries such as nuclear energy, LSD-25, RNA-DNA, etc., are under probability control by these beings. Further, humans are tested by some of these beings and cared for by others. Some of them have programs which include our survival and progress. Others have programs which include oppositions to these good programs and include our ultimate demise as a species. Thus the subject interpreted the evil ones as willing to sacrifice us in their experiments; hence they are alien and removed from us. The subject reported with this set of beliefs that only limited choices are still available to us as a species. We are an ant colony in their laboratory.

The first image is a painting depicting a scene with a group of people and animals, suggesting a historical or cultural context. The second image is a black and white photograph of a figure with a bow and arrow, which could be interpreted as a symbol of hunting or warfare. The third image is a dark, shadowy photograph of a figure with a bow and arrow, which could be interpreted as a symbol of hunting or warfare.

Below the images, there is a paragraph of text that provides an overview of the "Wendigo," a malevolent, cannibalistic spirit or creature from Algonquian folklore, embodying famine, winter, and insatiable greed. It is believed to stalk and devour humans with its hunger growing opportunistically to its eternal existence. The text suggests that the Wendigo is a creature that can be understood through cannibalism, which is a concept that is often associated with the supernatural or mythical.

At the bottom of the image, there is a link to "Reddit.com" with the text "AI Overview" and a button labeled "AI Overview" with a blue background. The overall style of the image is informational and educational, with a focus on the concept of AI and its applications.

I'm not saying they invented the idea just as America did not invent the idea of Atlantis. China sure seems to be amplifying the idea because it encourages the feelings of hopelessness in western society. I also believe as stated in my post that there is probably a kernel of truth in all of the ideas. To make them believable.

Took me 2 years to realize Tartaria was Russian propaganda.

>uh what do you mean a global society from the area of Russia just so happens to have a claim on the entire world? Like I said I'm sure there's a bit of truth in lost civilizations and technology but as archeologists will tell you the evidence is lacking and it's too convenient for Russia so in my opinion it's twisted with lies to benefit them.

Then I spent a year deep diving into UFO's because of all the disclosure stuff happening right now and I realized a lot of it was just a bunch of spooks for the CIA telling tall tales. All the people in the movement that claim to always be brushing up against CIA activities but they are a whistle blower. Yeah right. If you aren't dead or over seas running for your life you are not a whistleblower. I also realized too that they are peddling the same story "Greek mythology, Nazi technology, tall whites."

So now that I have realized and come out of the other side on these propaganda campaigns I feel I can see China's attempt from a mile away.

I do not think gnosticism is inherently nihilistic, i think that if anything it is a memetic chariot for a return of the idea of a benevolent creator God, even if the monad is beyond the veil of the idiot snake. Without the Demiurg God condones evil, with the demiurg evil must be smote.

One of the things about gnosticism is that there are many variations of it. People conflate gnosis the emotion with gnostic christianity - gnosis is effective enough that even pedovore satanists recognize it

The image is a digital illustration featuring a character with a dark, demonic appearance. The character has long, dark hair that cascades down her back, and her eyes are a striking red color. She has sharp, pointed horns on her head, and her ears are adorned with what appear to be star-shaped earrings. The character's skin is a deep, dark tone, and she is wearing a black, sleeveless top with a pattern that includes stars and what seems to be a geometric design. The background is a gradient of red and orange hues, with a faint, glowing effect that suggests a fiery or fiery-like environment. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of anime or manga, with a focus on dark, intense colors and a sense of fantasy or supernatural elements.

Recently I had a dream where a witch attacked me. A simple green line with small lines coming out of it in a 45 degree angle towards the left and facing outside proved to be very effective in barricading against the witch. it was drawn on the floor with an edding, across the length of the doorframe. later the witch caught me outside and tried to gain control over my body by physical touch, but i had drawn the same line around my wrists. this prevented her consciousness further entry and not only allowed me to fight back physically, but the act of the denied entry after having already started with my hands visibly hurt her. I am not very knowledgeable about all things occult, but this was as clear a revelation as it gets. can anyone make more of this than what was shown to me?

>can anyone make more of this than what was shown to me?

your consciousness can shape your unconscious space in the same way that you shape a lucid dream. Except now that some entity invaded your space (or you invited them in) they are trying to affect you through it. Your visualization practice has an intent behind (freezing, barring entry, causing harm, etc). The act of focusing all your intent in a glowing line has some "meaning" and that meaning translates to something your spirit will execute.

The image is a digital illustration featuring a witch in mid-flight. The witch is depicted in a dynamic pose, with her body arched and her arms extended, holding a broomstick. She is wearing a purple dress with a long cape and a pointed hat, which is typical of a witch's attire. The broomstick she's holding is brown and has a long handle. The background is dark and atmospheric, with a foggy effect and a hint of a building structure. The lighting in the image is dramatic, with a soft glow illuminating the witch and the broomstick, creating a sense of mystery and enchantment. There are no visible texts on the image.

The background of the image shows a castle with a red roof and white walls, surrounded by trees and a clear sky. The castle is situated on a hill, and the sky is dotted with white clouds. The character's position on the rock and the castle in the background create a sense of depth in the image. The overall style of the illustration is expressive and cartoonish, with a focus on the character's facial expression and the dramatic setting.

/loa/ — Law of Assumption & Subjective Reality Manifestation General Anonymous Fri 06 Feb 2026 15:36:12 No.41926139 ViewReplyOriginalReport

Welcome. The purpose of this general is to show you who you truly are, in order to bring your imagination to life, and shape your experience according to your every desire.

The Main Concepts:

- > What you truly are is the undivided consciousness that underlies the world.
- > Every single one of us live in their own reality, you are in your personal copy of the world. Your life is your private dream.
- > Reality is an imagined structure. Consciousness (the material non-material from what everything is made of) is the only Reality.
- > The World has no depth. It's a dream-like structure that behaves accordingly to how you assert it to be, and your sense of identity in relation to that. However you assert "reality" to be, whatever you adopt fully ("believe") then your experience will tend to behave "as if" it is the case, as long as you commit to it.
- > "However you imagine that it works, That's how it works".

> Can I manifest ____?

Yes! Every thought is a fact. If you can imagine it, you can experience it, intending it and bringing it forth into your life.

The image is a screenshot of a text message conversation. The conversation appears to be between two individuals, with the sender's name and email address visible at the top of the message. The conversation is dated from May 18, 2016, and is sent to the recipient, who is named "Bae Groff." The conversation is about a New Year's resolution and the sender's opinion on it.

The sender expresses their agreement with the recipient's positive thoughts and suggests that the recipient should think happy, positive thoughts. The sender also mentions that the recipient's New Year's resolution was changed to "life," which they believe is a positive change. The sender also mentions that the recipient's husband is in Mexico, and they are excited about the recipient's new life.

The recipient responds with a question about the sender's opinion on the recipient's new life, and the sender responds by saying that they are happy for the recipient and that they are excited about the recipient's new life. The sender also mentions that they are working on themselves and that they are working on their promotion.

The conversation ends with the sender wishing the recipient a good day and the recipient wishing the sender a good day. The sender also expresses their love for the recipient and hopes to see them soon. The conversation is marked as "100% agree..." and "100% disagree...", indicating a positive or negative response to the recipient's new life resolution.

You don't know what goes on in their heads I suppose. The idea is that you're supposed to repeat it until you don't feel the need to repeat it anymore because you believe it. If you're enjoying a delicious meal, you don't need to affirm that it's happening after all. That being said they never worked for me either

The image is a digital illustration featuring a young girl with dark hair, wearing a white blouse with a red and black plaid apron. She has blue eyes and is looking to her right. The girl is holding a teacup in her right hand, which is adorned with a blue and white design. In her left hand, she is holding a plate with a sandwich. The plate is placed on a three-tiered serving tray with a blue background. The tray has a white handle. The girl is seated at a table covered with a blue tablecloth. On the table, there are various items including a teapot, a plate with a sandwich, and a plate with a sandwich on a saucer. The background is plain white. The style of the image is cartoonish and appears to be a digital illustration.

Anons, don't let LoA be your only base. Other occult/magick systems work just as well if not better than this for the average person.

The TikTok roastie getting stupid success with stupid ease, often repeating wrong arguments and often using weird, "outdated" techniques got started with some sort of magick.

This community often seems to have a problem with "demonizing" other occult practices because they somehow believe they reached the truth or the root of it all. And don't get me wrong, it can definitely be true in some cases. But such arrogance is harmful, not only belief wise, but also because it prevents you from applying other systems.

"Oh, I know the base of it all, what's the point in doing silly sigils or affirmations or burning papers?" the point is that there's a 99% chance it's gonna work better for you than LoA stuff.

Just look at this general and around. How many people do you actually know, personally, that have had success with Neville's techniques? Likely not a lot. Truth of the word is, you, reader, lack the base to actually do LoA. Your SATS sessions are, and most likely will almost never be as good as Orion's or Neville's. You most likely have far too many limiting beliefs that you don't actually know how to tackle. LoA won't cut it for you. Magick will.

Why? Second causes.

You can "trick" your brain, your subconscious, into working with the assumption that the more complex a ritual, the more effort goes into it, the more it's gonna take effect. It's how older /x/ frens did it. Before this stuff, you had people making sigils, writing them with calligraphy, in silence, with candles, specific sounds, at specific hours and times, playing with planetary magick, calling in spirits... And it most likely worked for them.

Adding this type of umph to your practices is efficient. It works. [1]

I did. Seems like a skill issue or ignorance of self knowledge on their end (or flatout lies). However, i do agree that all this shit should be under one general, as every approach works as long as it makes sense for you. It's recognizing you as awareness that do the trick ultimately, acknowledging that your world and conciusness are one: Hammer down Non duality.

NTA but there's a better way than trying all that gimmicky shit to trick your subconsciousness: [i][i]good old fashioned self hypnosis[/i]

Play some binaural beats on headphones, in the 10Hz and under range, and relax yourself into the theta wave level. You can tell when you're there by when you lose all sense of time and awareness of peripheral sensations (e.g. you don't feel itches and stuff). Once you go that low your conscious mind is basically merged with the subconscious, and it allows any intentions/affirmations you make therein to manifest. Usually in a week in my experience.

The old rule of not "lusting for results" still applies, so you need to avoid thinking about whatever you do in that hypnotic state after you're done.

I hope that made sense, I'm pretty drunk right now.

A lot of people don't know this, but the founder of Scientology, L. Ron Hubbard privately wrote (and allegedly recorded for himself) a long set of "Affirmations" in the 1940s, basically raw self-hypnosis scripts meant to reprogram his identity.

They weren't public teachings. They were intensely personal, repetitive, and blunt, closer to subconscious drilling than "positive thinking" and I think that's probably the aim we should go with.

It's interesting how LOA-coded they are. The affirmations repeatedly frame money as inevitable, success as guaranteed, and himself as someone who naturally dominates rooms, influences people, and bends social reality. There are statements about wealth flowing in, people listening to him, women desiring him, and his words having power.

>"Material things are yours for the asking. Men are your slaves."

>"Money will flood in upon you"

>"You will make fortunes writing"

>"You are a magnificent writer who has thrilled millions"

It worked in a practical sense. Hubbard went from broke pulp writer to building one of the most powerful (and controversial) organizations on earth.

Maybe we should start viewing these less like affirmations in the traditional sense, and we should more move into trying to self-hypnotize like he did.

Noticing he used "you" affirmations, I hear it's pretty good. Read Chatter by Ethan Kross, talks all about internal dialogue.

He was also an occultist who worked with Jack Parsons. Also, everyone's living in some sort of hypnosis (see: first few chapters of Hypnosis Without Trance, but the whole book is good!) and Neville Goddard's experiments with Regardie used hypnosis I'm pretty sure and the subjects got the same results (see: The Romance of Metaphysics by Israel Regardie).

I always wonder about using the word 'will' in your affirmations. Even using his example here, he says "money WILL" and "you WILL make fortunes", yet for the other two he uses present tense. My understanding is you always have to use present tense all the time. But Scott Adams technique also uses the word 'will'. What's going on here?

Anonymous Sun 08 Feb 2026 03:10:51 No.41934105 Report

>>41934075

Whatever you say during your affirmation doesn't matter, the only thing that matters is the state being implied. "Will" can still imply inevitability rather than lack, depending on how it's used.

When someone says "money will come to me" from a hopeful, wishing state, then yeah, that reinforces "not yet." But when it's said from an assumed authority / inevitability frame, 'will' functions more like a command or a law of motion. It's closer to "this is how things work for me."

That's why you see people like L. Ron Hubbard or Scott Adams mixing tenses. Present tense installs identity ("I am dominant / persuasive / confident"), while future-tense installs trajectory ("money will flow," "this will succeed"), but only if the speaker already assumes inevitability.

If 'will' feels like hoping for you, then don't use it.

If it makes you feel closer to the state or you feel more confident, then it works.

I feel like it's gonna be really tricky for everyone, especially beginners, to distinguish that fine line between hoping and inevitability, would you really advise anyone to use the future tense when they're doing affirmation? I mean, affirmation is all about desired outcomes, one's wishes and dreams, so wouldn't present tense be the safest choice? Otherwise one can get trapped in wishing state forever

The image is a screenshot of a text document with a dark background and white text.

The document appears to be a list or guide, with the heading "Law of Attraction (LOA)" at the top. Below this heading, there are several bullet points providing explanations or guidelines related to the Law of Attraction.

The first bullet point states, "This one's the more mainstream idea." This suggests that the Law of Attraction is a widely accepted concept in mainstream thought.

The second bullet point reads, "Core ideas: You attract what you vibrate, focuses on emotions, energy, and mindset, likes attract like—feel abundant, attract abundance, practices often include visualization, gratitude, raising your vibe." This indicates that the core idea of the Law of Attraction is that one attracts what they are vibrating, focusing on emotions, energy, and mindset, and that one can attract abundance and abundance by practicing these principles.

The third bullet point states, "Law of Assumption (LOAS): This comes mostly from Neville Goddard's teachings and is more precise (and a bit stricter)." This suggests that the Law of Attraction is a more precise and stricter version of the concept, which is based on Neville Goddard's teachings.

The fourth bullet point states, "Core ideas: What you assume to be true hardens into fact, focuses on identity and belief, not emotional state, you don't have to feel amazing—just assume the outcome is already done." This indicates that the core idea of the Law of Attraction is that one can assume that what they believe to be true will become a fact, focusing on their identity and belief, and that one does not have to feel amazing to assume the outcome is already done.

The fifth bullet point states, "Law of Being the person who already has the thing: It's about being the person who already has the thing." This suggests that the Law of Attraction is about assuming that one already has the thing they desire, and that this is the key to attracting it.

The final bullet point states, "It's about being the person who already has the thing." This reiterates the core idea of the Law of Attraction, which is about assuming that one already has the thing they desire.

The text is in English and is presented in a straightforward, non-embellished style, with no images or graphics accompanying the text. The document is likely intended for educational or informational purposes, providing a concise overview of the Law of Attraction.

Not the method, not belief, and definitively not assumptions (by themselves). It's just imagination and intent. There's only consciousness changing of shape while remaining consciousness. If you adopt a model, you can conceive easier the changes tho, it does "looks" impossible when you think "manifestation" it's some bizarre addition instead of something you have been doing since forever (and now you do knowingly), and keep thinking that your world and your mind are not connected whatsoever.

It's evident that this site will never be ready for this stuff, which is perfectly ok i think, the original sources serves their purpose just fine by themselves and anyone can look them up if they are interested in the bigger picture of things, and that leaves /x/ for shitposting and the ocassional funny images, and also to be the coping hugbox incel group that you want it to be, nothing wrong with it but it's the truth of the situation, this place will never be /fringe/ but it doesn't need to be, all that stuff its done for. There's vastly greater and more useful metaphysical information out of this site than you will ever find on it on a million years, and it would save anyone the trouble of having to interact with this useless community that are just a bunch of faggots in denial and always will be.

>Creatures who have limited perception are quite predictable. An insightful experiment was performed on a type of fish called a pike. The fish was placed in an aquarium which had a glass divider that separated the pike from a dozen minnows, which were on the other side of the aquarium. Minnows are the pike's favorite tiny meal. The pike did not see the glass when he repeatedly tried for the minnows. Each time he tried, he slammed into the invisible barrier. Finally, after a few days of failure, the pike quit trying. The protective glass divider was removed so that the minnows were then unprotected. Predictable? The pike did not try to eat the minnows even when they swam right up to his nose. How is that for cold and remote? (smile) People will not be bothered by someone who tells them that they are sole commander, even when the truth is right under their noses. It's mostly projecting at this point, because if you have adopted a way of thinking that opens infinite possibilities of problem solving using magick and to mystical experiences, i don't know where's the cope. They're the ones coping, as in, unable to face the facts so they have to convince themselves that this cannot be done; and they are absolutely right.

No i didn't end up in the past, so it's more revision, like that people just start acting like what you revised is what happened.

For example, say John doesn't like you. Do two cups to say that John likes you, he's always liked you, you've always been friends, etc. Next time you see him, he'll be very friendly and nice.

>>41942644 is 100% correct- I've done the same thing many times just standing in the shower and deciding. The cups just give you a physical prop to help you believe, which can be helpful in the beginning or if it's something you have a lot of resistance to. That is really what all "methods" are- just rituals to help you cement the feeling. Once you realize that you really are in control and can have anything you want, you do just have to decide.

The image depicts a grand, ornate structure that appears to be a part of a larger architectural ensemble. The structure is predominantly white, adorned with gold accents and intricate detailing. It features a large, arched doorway that is illuminated by a golden light, casting a dramatic glow on the surrounding area. The doorway is flanked by two statues of angels, one on each side, which are also golden and appear to be made of a reflective material.

The structure is set against a backdrop of a dark, stormy sky, with dark clouds and a bright, radiant light source, possibly a sun, shining through the clouds. The ground below the structure is wet, reflecting the light from the doorway and the surrounding area.

In the foreground, there are several people who appear to be walking or standing, although their faces are not visible. The overall atmosphere of the image is one of grandeur and mystery, with the structure and its surroundings suggesting a place of significance and awe. There are no discernible texts or brands in the image.

The image is a split-screen graphic with two distinct sections. On the left side, there is a black and white photograph of Bob Marley, a famous Jamaican reggae musician. He is smiling and looking directly at the camera. The background of the photograph is plain, with no discernible details.

On the right side of the image, there is a red and beige colored background with the text

"EXODUS" in bold, stylized, and colorful letters. The text is in a non-Latin script, which appears to be a form of Ethiopian or African script. The font is bold and the letters are in a mix of red, yellow, and green colors.

there's something about bob marley's music

when the law of assumption finally worked for me, it was when i was listening to bob marley it's a feeling like the state akin to sleep or something like playing the waves, but obviously way easier to digest since it's made to be catchy and commercial a few days listening to it back in 2023, was when i first got my huge money manifestation

i don't know why i stopped his music always seem to bring luck

it's eerie

on the other hand, whenever i listen to that song called jesus dod by burzum, some bad shit usually happens

i was exploring a few mayhem songs (satanic black metal and blasphemous) cuz i was angry at god or whatever, and wanted to learn more about black metal, since i only know burzum then my room flooded and i almost lost my US$7,000 PC setup

i am a metalhead

i am not black and i thought reggae and that whole weed culture was cringe (i still think weed is cringe and i can't even smoke due to a lung issue)

but there is something to bob marley

i only know the albums Kaya and Exodus for now

In the past, it has been for me, material goods, conversations with an SP, academic success, all of those things have come after i've had this sort of "premonition" dreams, but this was before i knew of manifestation and LoA as a whole, so i'm wondering if that had anything to do with it. So far my dreams related to things I'm trying to manifest haven't come true. That being said, in those dreams, I experience things that I didn't even know I wanted, which is enlightening.

For example, if I'd be trying to manifest "a car", I'd have a dream where I'm sitting in a 2018 Audi R8 driving in a mountain road during sunset with a beautiful woman in the passenger seat. So now I have a better idea of what to visualize or desire.

The image is a composite of two separate photographs. In the upper portion, there is a photograph of a cat wearing a necktie and looking directly at the camera. The cat has a striped pattern and is positioned in front of a window. The background is a clear blue sky.

In the lower portion of the image, there is a photograph of a building with a sign that reads "Long day factory." The building has a brick facade and multiple chimneys, suggesting it might be a factory or industrial facility. The sky is overcast, and there are no visible clouds.

Overlaying the upper photograph is a speech bubble containing the text "Hope I don't have a long day." The text is in white and is placed in the upper left corner of the speech bubble. The style of the image is humorous, combining a real-life scene with a fictional element, such as a cat wearing a necktie.

close your eyes right now and still you believe the walls around you still exist. the visuals don't matter; is your "imagination" Real to you or not, that's all.

if no then its no.

if youre not X then you are not X, thus will never be X. ever.

if youre X, then you're X, then you're just X, there's nothing to do.

you can only get what you want if you already have it first.

you can never get what you want if you don't already have it first.

never.

but luckily for you, Jesus is the only hope there is in this absolutely hopeless world.

(hopes are lies, you don't actually have any, any possibilities at all, except for Jesus) with Jesus, which is Holy Imagination, you can be something else than what you think you are.

and that's the only thing there is. the only change there is. without it you're lost forever.

but you're forever it, so you've been God "once" you're always God forever, and never will not be.

anyway, just Be. just choose to Be. not want, not "get", not "finally". just Be. the world already ended. there's no 'hope', nothing can happen, you cannot achieve anything, okay? so fuck it all, you actually have no hope, so the only thing left is just Be whatever you think you ought to Be.

Well lying junkie whores are pretty easy to hook up with. Did you ever consider that?

If you really want a gf, get an average girl. Skinny or a little chub but not a fatass. She can be dumpy looking but if she fucks, shes a keeper. You have to find them out in the wild and ask for their number.

Dont buy into feminist bullshit. Being polite is one thing but women hate the trad take on romance. They are not the little angels our spiritual books told us they are. They want to be fucked too. Women like men who control them and are sexually aggressive when it comes down to business. You're not insecure for looking through your gfs phone either. Make sure she doesnt catch you though.

Also yeah. Put a gps on her car. If she tells you shes going to the store or something and you see instead of the store shes pulled up at someone elses house? Dont send a message. Head straight over there, confront the bitch and get her and hopefully the dude on camera and post it all over the internet. Imao

No I didn't. Can't you read?

I have got multiple answers but never a definite one to showcase what the limits of LoA are supposed to be. I'm not asking for "revision", I'm not asking about what somebody who might not even believe in LoA thinks about time reset either. I'm asking people who believe that LoA is real and whether they think that time reset is off limits or not and preferably why.

Your post is another example of the issue I'm facing here. Never a straight answer on topic with the general and never an actual discussion on time reset within the context of LoA. Why is it so hard to discuss this particular topic so much? Does LoA teach that time reset is possible or does it not?

Never a straight answer or explanation.

It does nothing.

That's it. At best you can gain some marginal improvement to your life through positive thinking.

Leaving that aside (as you may not like that message), what loa "teaches" regarding travelling through time or resetting it there are a couple of main things. There is Neville's revision but he never described it as time travel and it isn't, so anyone claiming that can be ignored. Neville never altered the previous events and they still remain. It's for making the future better if you want to follow Neville.

The second option with what loa teaches is that you can do anything so in theory you can do it. Our greatest sage Lilanon did it. Simply by believing.

Of course if you believe that you are fucking nuts.

Finally as this is a reality shifting hybrid general now you can also simply enter the void state at the edge of sleep (same as sats really) and then warp yourself to a parallel universe at exactly the same time that you want to go back or reset to.

Of course that's fucking stupid too.

So there you go. You have straight answers. Don't get upset at them as they are how it is.

I'm not upset at this at all. It's just that LoA is crap after all if it doesn't even do that. I never looked into these threads searching for "positive thinking" or anything similar. I expected literal magic and reality altering achievements but all I have got this far is "I got a girlfriend" and other stupid stuff.

Still I hope that there's a way for me to turn back time somehow even if it seems logically impossible. I certainly don't come to /x/ to look for normal things and ideas.

If there isn't anyone here who will try to convince me that you can reset time with LoA then this general is useless and the posters who profess absolute faith in LoA are liars otherwise they wouldn't hesitate all this time to give me actual answers like you did.

There is something to this and it's the closest I've come to achieve actual results from magic. I did Loa along with chaos, sigil and sex magic to perform my rituals. Both of the things I wanted to manifest came partially true, but not fully.

The first thing I wanted was to win the lottery, and I did, I won almost every week when I played, however I only won small amounts and never the big payout, so I must have done something wrong and I suspect it might have been my wording and performance during the ritual. The other thing is a that I saw a woman on the news once and I thought she was the cutest woman I've seen, so of course I wanted her. Believe it or not that summer while I was taking a course at work, the exact woman was there taking the course along with me. Not only that but she approached me and we hung out and chatted during the breaks, it was surreal. When it ended I took my chance and asked her out, only to find out she had a boyfriend. I left it there and took it as a sign, because I realized you're not suppose to use magic to fuck with other people like that, it usually leads to bad things.

This was probably 5 years ago, and it's something I want to try and do again, but I am currently abstaining which I will do for another 14 days before I try this ritual again why attempt to change anything in the world of the dead? give that up.

the dead have repeatedly buried the dead over and over, and will continue to do so.

don't ask the world for anything.

don't ask the world for "something" to "finally" "appear".

don't even "do" anything in the world at all for "something magical to happen".

just lose all hope. kill the world. kill your 'self'. it's all already just a dream. why depend on any dream for anything at all? dreams don't give a shit. so don't give a shit to it.

in the end there's only just you all alone for your own self. after death the world ends, so what the world defines of you don't rly matter.

does a god truly depend on the world at all for his own sufficiency?

the world, which always includes your own 'mind' tells you this and that, this thing sucks, that thing's horrible, this or that is hopeless or whatever, but the joke is, that's all just the world's business.

and never you. not even your 'mind'. your 'mind' too is just the part of the world.

you "can't manifest", you "try hard but it doesn't happen", you "can't keep the state", whatever.

all are mind's bullshit, thus world's bullshit.

you are above all this.

just be happy. you don't need the mind, nor the mind telling mind things.
just be happy, anon.
you already are.

The image is a cartoon-style illustration featuring a green frog with large, expressive eyes and a large, curved nose. The frog is holding a pink flower in its mouth. To the left of the frog, there is a white rabbit with a pink nose and a pink tongue. On the right side of the frog, there is a pink pig with a smiling expression. In the background, there are two chickens, one white and one brown, and a brown cow. The background is a light gray color. The style of the image is cartoonish and playful, with a focus on the interaction between the frog and the other animals.

The image shows a large, dark brown wooden trunk with a prominent lock and latch mechanism. The trunk has a classic design with a flat top and a curved side panel. The lock is black with a silver-colored handle, and the latch is also black with a silver-colored pull. The trunk is placed on a dark wooden floor, and there is a hint of a lighter-colored object to the left of the trunk, but it is not clearly visible. The lighting in the image is soft and diffused, casting shadows on the floor and the trunk. There are no visible texts or discernible brands in the image. The style of the image is a straightforward, non-stylized photograph with a focus on the object itself.

The fact that everything unfolded with such precision, everything I'd fantasised about other than actually having a sexual relationship with her (because of course she's a lesbian despite being one of the most single, gorgeous and feminine women I've ever known) makes me regret ever choosing someone I knew. The real kicker is I only picked her as a test, and ended up falling in too deep once she first got in touch. I've since read that this is kind of what happens when you try and use magick on an actual person, you will get right to the finish line and instead it will be you who ends up in danger of becoming the obsessed one, as everything else has worked up to that point and many can't let go so you did a good job walking away.

The male figure is pointing upwards with his right hand, while the female figure is pointing downwards with her left hand. Both figures are wearing what appears to be a space suit, and they are both looking towards the viewer.

The background of the image is a vibrant mix of colors, including shades of purple, green, and blue, with stars and nebulae scattered throughout. The overall style of the artwork is reminiscent of science fiction or fantasy, with a focus on the cosmic and the human form. I've been doing this since last year, here it's how it went for me:

>neville sats

I've been trying to manifest a relationship with someone I had a crush on during my university years, as well as a sex with a married coworker/my former boss.

Recently, I've started running into my former crush almost every day on my way to work, as she now works nearby. I also found out that my married coworker created a swinger profile on an adult website a while ago.

It's not exactly what I was hoping for yet, but things seem to be moving in that direction, which honestly surprises me. So, be patient and persist.

>robotic affirmations and list method

Manifested a promotion to one of the best paying jobs in my country.

Also, manifested the victory of a person who has influence over the continuity of my job. She initially lost, but I ignored the 3D and didn't allow my faith to be shaken. Later, something extraordinary and unexpected happened and she was appointed as the leader where I work.

Also, a coworker who persecuted me and plotted against me was fired. While manifesting it I wasn't focusing on negative feelings towards her, but rather on the peace I would be feeling if she was no longer around.

Pay no attention to the trolls in these threads. They're either impatient and frustrated people who couldn't persist, didn't practice it properly, or agents trying to discourage others so fewer people discover and use this power.

As someone who manifested an instantaneous cure from an illness I had as a teen, through prayer, before I ever heard of LOA and at a time when I couldn't afford any treatment, I believe God created the world with this structure of power woven into it. It exists to be understood and used by those who learn how to work with it, just like any other law of the universe, like gravity, for example.

Read the bible. A lot of secrets are in there.

PLEASE NOTE

This is the read-only archive of the Dimensional Jumping subreddit.

This is being maintained to ensure that the many valuable contributions our subscribers have made over the past couple of years remain available. All historical material is publicly viewable, however you will not be able to post or comment on this subreddit.

A new introduction will be added soon which will cover the history of the subreddit and its underlying concept, the thinking behind archiving the subreddit at this point - and details of its upcoming replacement project.

Many thanks to everyone who has gotten involved with this subreddit during its lifetime, even if it was just with their eyeballs!

INTRODUCTION

This is a place to share your personal experiences of the shifting nature of reality, through the deliberate application of techniques to bring about "jumps" in our personal worlds - in effect, switching to a more desirable universe.

Header No. 982 - Please note that a shift in your experience does not require a change in the header number, which should be treated as an emblem of change and a symbol of potential rather than an ID.

The hex colour for 982 is: #0003d6.

- Please browse the content in the links below before asking any questions.

OVERVIEW

The essence of Dimensional Jumping is the leveraging of perspective-structuring metaphors and the techniques derived from them:

Techniques - The original technique that began the subreddit is described in this introduction and is an easy way to get started. Alternative approaches which allow more control are also listed.

Active Metaphors - Try out the Hall of Records and Infinite Grid metaphors which illustrate why there is no "other you" involved in a jump. You are radically changing your experience, not swapping physical bodies. For a different perspective on subjective experience overall see The Imagination Room.

Demo Exercises - There are two easy exercises that you can do to prove to yourself whether there is anything to this: The Owls Of Eternity™ patterning exercise and the Two Glasses Exercise.

RULES

Please follow these guidelines to help make this a worthwhile project:

1 - Do not submit anything fictional. This subreddit is for the sharing of genuine anecdotes and techniques. There are other subreddits available for honing your story-making skills.

2 - Commenters should therefore assume the truth of OP's account. Failure to do this will result in deletion of your comment. It is for moderators to enforce Rule 1, not commenters.

3 - Links to possibly useful material should include discussion as to its relevance, and a personal review if possible.

4 - Posts about spontaneous unusual events are likely better directed to Glitch (events which make you question reality) or Mandela Effect (memories out of sync with the world).

5 - No spamming or you'll be banned from the subreddit.

6 - Do not downvote posters simply because they misunderstand something or have an idea you disagree with. If it contributes to the discussion and is in the spirit of the subreddit, it's all good.

7 - Be as friendly as possible. :-)

8 - Obey the rules.

IRC CHANNEL

There is currently no active IRC channel or other external group officially associated with the subreddit.

NOTE

There is no established theory of "jumping" or its mechanism, although there are numerous ways of viewing its nature.

It is for readers to decide for themselves through personal investigation and introspection whether jumping is appropriate for them or not.

An open mind combined with healthy caution is the correct mindset for all approaches targeted at the subjective experience.

Never believe something without personal evidence; never dismiss something without personal evidence.

What is the number?

Part of the original mythology is: maybe you can keep track of changes in your reality by referring to an anchor number or "Universe ID" for your dimension...

Things tend to come up in comments and discussions which then get lost in the fog of history, so I'm posting a few potentially useful fragments as posts to make them easier to find.

What's On TV?

One way of thinking of your current experience is that you are a conscious being who has tuned into one of a billion different TV channels. Each TV show has been filmed from a 1st-person perspective viewpoint. You are a viewer who has forgotten that he isn't actually the character onscreen.

Doing a "jump" means to select a custom channel which fits your desires. The selection mechanism operates by using your thoughts. You imagine part of the content of the destination channel; the mechanism then autocompletes the selection!

The problem, though, is that without realising it we have our thoughts firmly fixed to the control panel at its current settings. So before a change can happen, we need to loosen that and detach from the scenes we're watching now. Only then can the channel mechanism perform the autocomplete.

This makes it clear that there is no other "you" who gets left behind when you "jump", and nor does anyone get displaced:

When you change the channel on a TV, do you leave behind another "you" still watching the previous channel? Obviously not.

When you change the channel on a TV, does the previous channel still "exist" even if nobody is watching it? Does it matter? Surely not.

Synchronicity TV

We can modify the TV metaphor and make it more subtle, to help us imagine how selection and synchronicity works. Instead of switching to another channel, we are going to modify our current channel to make the content more pleasant. By doing this, we're in effect creating or shifting it into a customised channel.

In this example, we really want to experience more owls in our life, apparently without regard to the constraints of time and space and causality.

For this, you draw a picture of an owl on your TV screen. From that point, the owl picture always there, but its visibility depends upon the rest of the imagery onscreen. When the dark scenes of the TV show switch to a bright white scene, suddenly the owl "appears" - it is "manifested".

Now we adapt this to daily life. Imagine an owl idea being dissolved "holographically" in the space around you, and replace the notion of dark/white scene with appropriate contexts. Having "drawn" the owl into the space, you go about your day.

Mostly the owl isn't anywhere to be seen, but wherever an appropriate context arises then aspects of the owl idea shine through and are manifest: A man has an owl image on a t-shirt, the woman in the shop has massive eyes and eyebrows like feathers, a friend sends you an email about a lecture at the zoo highlighting the owl enclosure, a newspaper review of Blade Runner talks extensively about the mechanical owl in the interrogation scene, and so on.

The Owls Of Eternity™

Note that the manifestations occur from the point of thought onwards - and that the owl pattern is overlaid on all subsequent experience regardless of prior observations.

Hence, owl-related events might arise which, in the standard view, must seemingly have their origins in external events prior to your act. You may also notice, say, lots of owl-related items in your house which surely must always have been there. You may even find yourself noticing owl-related aspects when you recall events from your (apparent) past.

In fact, you may well start feeling uncertain as to whether these things always have-existed or whether they only now have-existed as a result of your act.

These owls are spatially agnostic and have no respect for temporal matters! (8>=

Note: These examples are linked to the ideas described in A Line Of Thought and The Patterning of Experience.

I work for a medical company and 3 years back worked a flu clinic. We went to an old folks community and one patient, probably about 80 years old came up with an owl hat (like an owl sitting on top of his head), 3 watches on his arm with an owl design on each one. He also had an owl shirt and a cane with a plush owl sticking to the side of it.

I told him nice hat.

His response: "I don't give a hoot!"

I don't know if I've ever laughed that hard in my life.

I know, I know, not super relevant, but had I done this exercise the night before and then had this happen to me.....my goodness, I would be quite surprised!

Read through this quick a couple days ago and didn't go about the ritual described in it, but merely let it happen as soon as I saw my first owl. A little Hedwig toy sitting in my sister's bedroom on the radiator placed in the middle amongst an arrangement of other stuffed animals. Decided from then on that I'd like to see what the theme can do for me throughout the day. Forgot about it for a while... and then, just as I'm about to leave the breakroom at work I glimpse up at the TV. An owl, given the ability to speak (probably part of a symbolic ploy for an advertisement), was enlarged on screen. I snickered. I thought about it a bit at work and sure enough... no owls. Ten minutes prior to writing this post and I glance over at the game I'm playing. Somebody had summoned a pet "owllet" and a player had decided to emote "welcome" to it. Is there any meaning behind it all? I'm not sure... but I'll keep a lookout.

I think owls are special because I envision them as the eyes through which the goddess Athena watches over people (should you put any stock in the reality of myth). In the video game Zelda there's an especially important owl that guides you through the early stages as well, no doubt echoing the connection to Athena and her role in guiding the hero on his/her journey. There's also an important goddess in those games called Hylia. The way I see it is that we're all potential heroes in the stories we live and seeing the "owls" (or whatever image we decide is meaningful) in our lives can help to affirm us of the vast potential we each individually carry.

This sounds kinda like just confirmation bias to me?

[–]TriumphantGeorge[S] 33 points 10 years ago*

As in "seeing more red cars because I've just bought a red car", for sure. If you experiment though, you find it's something more than that. I'd scale it like this:

conf. bias > coincidence > synchronicity > "manifestation" > shifting > "jumping"
They're all just varying levels of "pattern selection" or activation or overlay, of course. The exact same attentional mechanism that's always happening when we redirect ourselves, just to a greater extent. The thing to consider is, what are you selecting the pattern from?

You might be tempted to say that we select the pattern from the 3D-immersive environment around us, but actually that apparent 3D-immersive environment is the result of pattern selection.

[–]TreborMAI 10 points 10 years ago

Close - confirmation bias is more about one's preconceived beliefs, and observing things that confirm them, and not observing things that don't. But the Owl thing is more accurately an example of "frequency illusion," a cognitive bias in which a "thing" you give attention to suddenly appears everywhere.

When I first heard about this sort of thing I decided to run experiments. If it was true, I could open a book at random and read the answer to any question I had. I had planted some onions in my garden and wondered what the gestation period was. I immediately opened a book at random and found on it the gestation period of an onion. I have never seen this written in a book before or since. I decided to try an object. I wished for a red table cloth. The next day I was walking down the street and found a red table cloth sitting by itself on the side of the road. I had never had a red table cloth before. I told some co-workers about my experiences. One asked me if I could make something appear for him. It made me sort of nervous. I imagined it would take longer and I would have to focus more, especially when he told me what it was. He wanted a white leather couch. Two weeks later, the owner's best friend came in and in front of all of us said she had a white leather couch she wanted to give away and asked if anyone wanted one. Everyone's mouth dropped open. No one has offered me a white leather couch before or since. I later told a co-worker about this experience at a different job. He asked if I could make a couch appear for him. The next day on the side of the road I saw 15 couches. That has never happened before. I was debating climate change with someone and wrote them a poem about it snowing everywhere. A couple of days later snow was recorded in 49 of the 50 contiguous states for the first time in recorded history. February 12, 2010. The odds of these things happening, if left to chance are in the trillions. The only rational explanation is that we live in a dream state. These things happen to all of us every single day. It's not very scientific to ignore it. Anecdotal evidence is a form of evidence. Do your own experiments. We must all stop acting powerless.

Your idea of opening a book to the correct page just reminded me of something similar. I started a temp job earlier in the year doing administration (so a lot of filing work involved) and when I'd be filing papers, I started noticing that when I would open up a file in a random spot to try and find where I needed to file my paper, a lot of the time I'd just open it straight to the correct page first time. This happened way more often than it should have, and it wasn't that I was just getting lucky and managing to kind of estimate the right page each time because I wouldn't even attempt to guess at the right spot, I'd just open it up without any thought about what I was doing at all except for I'd be thinking about the page number/letter I needed in my head. I started referring to them jokingly in my head as my "magical filing hands". Interestingly when I told myself to stop being stupid, there was no way it was anything more than a coincidence it stopped happening for a few months, until I thought about it again and wondered if it would happen again, and it did slowly start happening with more frequency again.

I try to be a skeptical person because I think about how other people would brush that off as just a coincidence but I don't know, it just feels like it happened too often to just put it down to chance.

[–]TriumphantGeorge[S] 12 points 10 years ago

Haha, very funny! As mentioned elsewhere, if you actually do the exercise, the progression of plausible explanation scales something like this:

conf. bias > coincidence > synchronicity > "manifestation" > shifting > "jumping"
Strictly speaking, you of course can't tell the difference between noticing more of something and there being more of something, but when events arise that's a little different. And there's plenty of scope for changing the target and being more restrictive, to further prove to yourself there's more to it than that. If B-M could be described as "pattern selection from a 3D scene", then this effect is like experiencing "pattern selection from a 4D environment".

As I say, you have to actually do it. Just thinking about it, you don't learn anything other than, well, what you think will happen. It's quite good fun, the more you play with it, the more interesting the results can get.

If people believed in soulmates they wouldn't have sex until they found their destiny. So many parents now have had children with people they shouldn't have and so the children aren't taught the truth. Soulmates are real. It wouldn't take long to correct the problem if people only believed in their soulmates instead of God. Now most people have sex because they are too embarrassed not to or don't want to hurt another person's feelings or are using them as sexual objects or to boost their own egos. People need to learn that they are sacred and that everyone else is sacred too. If only people treated each other as brothers and sisters. If only parents protected their children. Whatever happens to bring about the change, if the world were filled with lovers, it would be a better place. Global warming is just the collective unconscious reacting to the problem. It's the simple part, as you and I both know. If we can see owls everywhere, we can cool down the sun. Chastity is a little harder. But the internet is a great start. Reddit is a great start.

I am not suggesting there aren't multiple perfectly innocuous solutions to the population problem, just that those getting a dimension shift solution may find they get one not among the innocuous list.

[–]ElizaBulla 6 points 10 years ago*

In the dimension I came from New Zealand was bigger. Australia was further south. Mexico was shaped differently. South America was further west. Maybe one day I'll wake up and overpopulation will have never even happened. I don't know. The population of the Europe is diminishing. Governments are paying people to have children in some places. Even China just lifted it's population growth restrictions because they need to add some young people to help take care of the elderly. If there is a war though for whatever reason what I think about is that New Zealand outlawed nuclear weapons in their waters a long time ago and will be neutral. Most people get drawn into one side or another. They judge the rich or they judge the poor. Anyone who put money into the stock market in 2008 could be rich if they wanted to be though. And rich oil companies are donating money to non-profit organizations so they can research alternatives to oil only to have their money used for people to fly around the world and meet in diverse spots to hold up signs and protest the very people that gave them the money. On the other hand the rich are often scared of the poor and think everyone is out to take their money and that no one loves them for who they are so they are often paranoid and stingy. Many don't respect those of us who choose to do physical labor for a living. They think it means we're stupid. I don't know if I'm going to end up in New Zealand or in a different dimension. I plan to go with the flow and keep an open mind. I just saw Bill Murray's Christmas special and was pretty amazed. I believe anyone who thinks human sacrifice is the answer to their karmic problems (which is what Christianity teaches) is barbaric and has a lot to work out but it sort of made me feel like there might be hope for world peace and America yet. It had a great feel to it as of course does the sermon on the mount. It made me feel like maybe we all just jumped into a dimension where everything works out wondrously well. Whatever needs to happen to achieve it, that's where my focus is.

True but many people have sex because it's fun. Abstinence is either a result of programming or choice.

But that last part about global warming. You know exorbitant excessive amounts of CO₂ is (indirectly) what's causing the earth's temperature to rise, right?

[–]ElizaBulla 3 points 10 years ago*

The whole point of talking about global warming on this thread is the idea that people here know it's a dream state and everything follows the rules of a story. Let's just get the book out and see, where we are now. Where you've decided we should go, I might add. About Revelation 13 I'd say.... "This calls for wisdom. Let the person who has insight calculate the number of the beast, for it is the number of a man. That number is 666." Carbon, the intergalactic signature of man, the atom with 6 electrons 6 neutrons and 6 protons that makes up the human body. "All people, great and small, rich and poor, free and slave [must] receive a mark on their right hands or on their foreheads, so that they cannot not buy or sell unless they have the mark, which is the name of the beast or the number of its name." ...Or to put in another way... then the prince fucked Cinderella's sisters...welcome to the carbon tax, party people! Casual sex isn't fun. It's beastly, and the cause of global warming. Beasts are the creators of the vast majority of CO₂. We'll see where y'all take the story next....

First of all, you have to clear your mind of the pre-conceived idea that there isn't a woman out there who likes you exactly the way you are or at least the good optimistic open-hearted person you were when you were six. It's possible that you've already met your soul mate or know who it is deep down it's just that you assume they are out of your league or don't like beards or some such nonsense. People are disillusionally pessimistic and compromise because they think it makes them nicer, when in fact it's what's getting in the way. If you tell a person you're in love with someone else chances are it doesn't hurt their feelings. They are too deep down so you can move on as brother and sister. Everyone needs this kind of support too. Chastity will be required. Women feel violated when a man has sex with them who isn't their soul-mate. I don't care what they say. Do you want someone fucking your soul-mate? Soul mates always have mutual feelings, to state the obvious. You like the same music, food, movies, at least in my experience. There will be magical coincidences that point to you having had a connection before you met. You don't have to be afraid of impressing each other, but be careful. It's a sacred thing and you won't find it until you're on a sacred path and ready for it. Decide to be a good person and be optimistic. Things started slowly falling into place for me when I became completely frustrated with my life and in a state of intense crisis decided I had nothing to live for one night and decided to work towards making the universe a better place. The next day someone randomly handed me a book that said, "if you're reading this book it's because you've dedicated your life to making the universe a better place."

<http://www.amazon.com/China-Falun-Gong-Revised-Edition/dp/1586131001> Make sure your karma with everyone is absolutely pristine. If you hurt someone, apologize. Go into your past. Right your wrongs. AA's 12 steps are great. I just wish they would take the powerlessness and alcohol out of it. Cut way way down on alcohol red meat and dairy but don't obsess over it. Eat a lot more raw fruits and vegetables. It's good planet karma and you will feel better too. If you find yourself judging someone realize judging is a psychological defense mechanism. You are guilty of whatever you are judging another for. The exception is when you are doing it from a position of love, like a parent correcting a child. If you find yourself irrationally hating certain people, go out of your way to get to know them. Chances are, you will find things you like and respect. There will be people who turn against you or make fun of you when you display sincerity and vulnerability. That's the price of deciding to become a mature happy adult. When you loose your way read the Tao <http://brianbrownwalker.com/tao-te-ching/or> Confucius or whatever other positive books you come across. http://www.nohoax.com/index.php?option=com_content&view=article&id=24&catid=1 teaches you the rules of creation. Keep an open mind. Once you've started down this rabbit hole it might take years for you to accept all the stuff out there that really is true. And of course you are going to get push-back from family and friends. Don't talk to people about stuff unless you feel inspired to or they ask. Once you know you've found your soul mate that doesn't mean the struggle is over. You might end up having to convince them of this dimensional jumping thing which may be a lot harder than you think. It shatters belief systems and rips the God in the sky rug right out from under people. It rips the powerless atheist rug right out from under people too. There might be other types of obstacles. Maybe everything will fall into place perfectly. Everyone's story is different. The key to finding happiness is being really good and dreaming big. And it's a two way street. If you want all your dreams to come true, be someone else's dream. Treat them like nothing short of God. Because that's what we all are. Bless everyone. Start a band and write a love song, a song about your frustrations, anything. Even if it turns out the person you wrote it about doesn't like you, someone who hears it will feel that way about you or resonate with how you feel. If not music, maybe a poem or book, or if you have someone in mind, a letter. Build a house. I don't know your path but you'll have to make yourself vulnerable. Great risk is a path to great pain, but it's also the only path to great pleasure. Life will become filled with a lot more of both. Most movies will probably become boring and video games absolute torture. You'll probably get rejected but maybe not, and eventually the universe gives you what you put out there. Don't take it personally or get bitter. Think about it from her perspective. Are you ready to have a kid and provide a home and support for a wife? Work on your ethical career of solar panel installation or whatever and she will come. Try to make a living doing or building something you would want to exist in a perfect world. That rules out a whole lot of jobs people consider "good." God would never be a surgeon now would s/he? "Be the change you want to see in the world." If you want a loving supportive woman, be a loving supportive man. When life seems unfair or crazy just imagine that you are a character in a story, because you are, and control yourself so you'll be the protagonist. The right answer is usually the hard answer. Be brave. It might be hard at first. Especially if you haven't really done it before but as it becomes a habit it gets easier and easier until it comes naturally. It must have been crazy hard for the first wolf to walk up to a person, but you can see how that has turned out. That's what this path feels like at first. There are always obstacles to overcome. You must be patient and you'll probably have to be nothing short of a hero. But it's worth it. It's the proverbial mainstream path that no one actually walks.

Instead of owls, I wanted to see more dolphins in my life. And the concept of dolphins did appear in my life in plausible ways. I had the memory of being gifted glass dolphin ornaments from an old friend. A few days after I decided to see more dolphins, my friends and I went to the beach and one friend said there was a cool spot to watch whales (not exactly the same as dolphins, but similar). Today though confirmed to me that it was working. I was having a conversation with a friend and we were on the topic of bees' intelligence and then out of the blue he said "I wonder if dolphins are like octopuses."

A month later, I'm still seeing dolphins! One day when I was just walking on the street my attention was turned to the brand name "DOLPHIN" on an RV, I'm assuming it's the brand of the RV. Then, on Twitter one day, I noticed one of the Trending hashtags was Dolphins. It was about the Miami Dolphins team, which I've never heard of (I'm not really into sports). I never look at the Trending topics but of course, my attention got directed there.

This is known as the frequency illusion, a form of cognitive bias. It's when a thing, word, animal, etc, which has recently come into your mind suddenly seems to appear everywhere with unlikely frequency. A common example is when someone gets a new car, and suddenly starts to see that same car model everywhere. Basically the more you think about something, the more you notice it in places you normally wouldn't. So don't worry, you're not "jumping dimensions" :)

I did a bit of an experiment of my own. After reading this yesterday, I told myself that I would focus on owls today. I never tend to notice owls at all in my every day life.

So today I went to the car wash. Noticed an owl locket in the gift shop. Went to the animal shelter, saw a cat with huge eyes that reminded me a whole whole lot of an owl. Went to Target, saw two different owl related items. Lastly, I went to a Halloween store and saw an owl statue.

I never notice owls in my day to day life. It's a strong possibility that this is cognitive bias.

So, I decided that since owls are fairly popular right now on merchandise everywhere and fb pictures and stories, it wasn't going to be a good indicator for me. Instead, I imagined a ladybug. Thought on it for a few minutes, and quite completely forgot about it. Next day, I am going through my son's toys to get rid of some things, and I come across a little set of tweezers with a ladybug on top (I believe it's from a bug-hunting kit my dad got him at the butterfly pavilion). Interesting, I note, but again forget about it. Then, yesterday I was walking into the grocery store and a gosh-durn ladybug flew directly into my face. Hit my nose, and I turned around thinking it was a fly only to see the little red guy flying away. Let's be clear here: it's way past ladybug season. It's fairly cold here and we've had several frosts and a snow. That was a wake-up call if I've ever seen one. I'm intrigued and delighted.

Interesting, but doesn't this lead to solipsism?

[–]TriumphantGeorge[S] 9 points 10 years ago*

Not solipsism, because "you" aren't actually a person, what you are is a conscious perspective that is "before" the experience of separation. There's not "only you" because you are in effect taking on the shape of all people; it's just that your sensory experience is from a particular vantage point.

In effect we experience a private copy of the world, and so does "everyone else". The nature of the overlap between us isn't like the sharing of an "environment", it's more like the sharing of a "resource", a toy box of possible patterns and experiences.

This is difficult to describe in words, because in this view space and time are parts of experiencing - so we can't actually talk about different perspectives being located relative to each other or occurring at the same or different times, but language presupposes such "parts" and "locations".

The Hall of Records metaphor is one way to approach it. Basically, all conscious perspectives will turn out to be the same perspective in the end.

[–]trrrrouble 2 points 10 years ago

If everyone is watching his own private TV channel, then the other people in your life are fictional.

permalinkembedsaveparentreportreply

[–]TriumphantGeorge[S] 6 points 10 years ago

So are you, though, in terms of "being a person". Going beyond the metaphor: you're not fictional, you just aren't what you thought you were.

permalinkembedsaveparentreportreply

[–]trrrrouble 2 points 10 years ago

I don't like the "everything is fiction and I am actually God playing with puppet theater" approach.

That's just solipsism.

permalinkembedsaveparentreportreply

[–]TriumphantGeorge[S] 7 points 10 years ago

Yeah, it's not really, although that metaphor obvious implies a separation, as if there's a "you" and a "theatre".

A better description is to say it's more like everyone is an "imagination space" in which their experiences appear. Everyone exists 'parallel-simultaneously' in a sense, although the relationship between people can't really be described. This is because the perception of space and time is part of an experience, rather than a context in which experiences arise; you can't really talk about how different perspectives co-exist. The Infinite Grid and Hall of Records metaphors give one way to think of this.

But...

If you stop thinking of the world as a "spatially-extended place unfolding in time" and instead think of it more as a "resource" which contains all possible experiential patterns, that's closer to the mark I'd say. Right now, you are a "consciousness" which is "taking on the shape of" experiences - specifically the experience of being-a-person-in-a-world. And everyone else is too. It's just that you are not in the same place and time; rather, you are all sharing the same "toy box" of experiences.

And when we say "everyone" there, really we can't talk about it being lots of people that are living in a world; it's more like lots of parallel-simultaneous experiences that are happening.

[–]trrrrouble 1 point 10 years ago

If I am everyone and no one at the same time, if this is all a theatre in an imagination space, how is this different from "we are the universe experiencing itself subjectively"?

You are not playing for any particular character, you are playing for all characters at once (this is eerily reminding me of Buddhism actually).

All these parallel experiences are your experiences, you are living through every one of them.

Still, this worldview is unsatisfactory to me.

permalinkembedsaveparentreportreply

[–]TriumphantGeorge[S] 1 point 10 years ago

How is this different from "we are the universe experiencing itself subjectively"?

It's not different at all, although we have to be careful what we are calling "we", because apparently being "you" is part of the experience. I wrote the phrase being-a-person-in-a-world in the earlier comment, but the next step is to rephrase this as "taking on the shape of":

being-a-world-from-the-perspective-of-a-person

Where "world" is in the larger sense of the concept, as something like the currently active patterns or "facts". This leaves the universe as being something like "all possible states".

All these parallel experiences are your experiences, you are living through every one of them.

For sure, but not "yours" in the sense of being a person. Rather, it is in the sense of being "that which has or takes on the shape of experiences".

Still, this worldview is unsatisfactory to me.

What aspects do you find unsatisfying or problematic?

permalinkembedsaveparentreportreply

[–]trrrrouble 2 points 10 years ago*

What aspects do you find unsatisfying or problematic?

For one, it rejects anything that can be observed because it's all in the imagination space anyway. There are no really rigid basic rules that can never be broken, because it's imagination space anyway.

I don't want to live in such a universe. I want to live in my 3d space moving over time with me as an individual. Of course, my wants or beliefs play no role in anything, whichever model you pick.

permalinkembedsaveparentreportreply

[–]TriumphantGeorge[S] 4 points 10 years ago*

For one, it rejects anything that can be observed because it's all in the imagination space anyway.

Well, I'd say that aspects of anything, as patterns, can be brought into sensory form, and that's what you are experiencing right now. Is this so different to seeing the world as made from atoms "out there" and you being trapped in a skull "in here"? This way, you have no boundary and the whole universe is "dissolved" inside you.

Even in the standard model of perception, you are not observing anything directly. If you go with the idea that there are nerve impulses being sent to your brain and within that a multi-sensory image of the world is created - you still end up with a similar result in a way. The result is that, right now, looking around this room, all of it is just mental imagery floating in your "perceptual space" - i.e. your mind.

The only difference is that we are recognising that, since we never experience anything beyond this "perceptual space", and that even our thoughts about an "external world" arise inside that same space, really there is no such thing as an outside, stable place.

Sure, we can pretend that there is one, based on how our experiences seem to have some habitual regularity to them, but the actual existence of a stable "substrate" that supports them, is fiction and faith.

There are no really rigid basic rules that can never be broken, because it's imagination space anyway.

Again, this is not so different to the standard view in a way. The "laws of physics", for instance, are not laws in the sense of being fundamental to the universe and being obeyed by all things. Scientifically speaking, a "law" is a general rule inferred by observation. We have observed certain "regularities" or habits in our experiences of the world and, combined with the concept of an objective external 3D place, we imagine that there is a stable place which unfolds consistently with those regularities.

But we are just imagining it to be the case.

In fact, the "laws of physics" have changed many times over the last 100 years, never mind the last 1,000. The "physical universe" of today is drastically different to the "physical universe" of 100 years ago...

So we're left in much the same position in the standard model, as with the "imagination room" model:

We only ever experience our own minds. Any "external world" is completely imaginary and without direct evidence.

We observe regularities in our experience. Any "laws" are completely imaginary and without direct evidence.

The benefit of actually recognising this, though, is that the direct experience of being open and unbounded and "the space in which everything arises", is actually very nice. As an idea it sounds cold and empty and lonely; as a reality it is the opposite.

There is one boundary. No matter how many or how hard people want to believe otherwise, a man can't wave his little finger and create a man. Adam was born of a woman and Jesus had a telepathic relationship with his wife. To believe otherwise doesn't make it a possible experiential pattern. It just makes a great dragon that must be slain. The boundary is God. She is the same yesterday today and forever no matter how man tries to imagine her away. Go ahead George. Slay the dragon.

Back in the 90's in my mind Kurt Cobain stood for everything real and unmaterialistic. I read Courtney Love had bought a Lexus and I thought to "myself" if I were Kurt Cobain I would shoot myself in the head. Three days later he was dead.

[–]ElizaBulla 2 points 10 years ago

I wanted to die for a really long time. I obviously felt responsible. I felt like I should have gone out of my way to meet him instead. It made me realize celebrities are just people and we are more than just observers in their lives. Putting them on a pedestal, thinking we're nothing compared to them doesn't help them. When Kurt Cobain died, it was like an entire future died. People became so materialistic. Watching Courtney Love become a movie star was surreal. In 1998 I left the country and went to Asia. I had to get away, but it didn't help. It was worse there. I was so homesick. I used to listen to Pavement and Radiohead and cry a lot. I got a tumor. It went away when I got malaria. I went to France. I hated it. I wanted to follow the music. I would have gone to the UK but could see myself ending up on a street corner selling flowers and cussing out Thom Yorke for singing about sitting around being bored with his girlfriend, just like my namesake in that George Bernard Shaw play, Pygmalion. I couldn't teach English there. So I came back here. Things are a lot better now. Black boys with mohawks and beards on skateboards, a sort of sacred feel to a lot of secular music after the millennium. And I met a little boy who looks just like Kurt did when he was that age and sounds just like him to. Nice parents. Farmers. Glad I stuck it out. Still hate the Foo-Fighters with a passion though. Thanks for asking. This is like therapy.

[–][deleted] 1 point 10 years ago*

Quite a journey! I hope you're doing well now.

It's also a deep Campbellian metaphor: we are "here" and we hate it, so we decide to go "there" but it's worse... and, at the end, we come full circle... we return home as changed persons, discovering that the place has changed as well... and what was supposedly lost is now "here" again, in a new form.

I obviously felt responsible.

But, fortunately, it wasn't your fault.

It's the good ol' "did-I-manifest-it-or-was-it-precognition?" conundrum...

To get synchronicities, we need information "traveling" back in time. It's like a feedback loop, a resonance between two events.

This article, by Eric Wargo, might be of interest, exploring a possible explanation for notable synchronicities about death and disasters. If you don't like lengthy posts, read at least the paragraphs about another Liz (Elizabeth Fraser, Cocteau Twins singer) and the tragic death of Jeff Buckley.

This is like therapy.

Well... speaking of solipsism, coincidences, Pygmalion and therapy... have you ever heard about the famous ELIZA? :-)

permalinkembedsaveparentreportreply

[–]ElizaBulla 1 point 10 years ago*

Yes. And the "Eliza Effect" is a tendency the inventor of the program noticed of people to argue with a machine. People do it to me too. Maybe it's my face. It seems to happen to me everywhere but here. I look like a child. There is a feedback loop. I am a muse for several musicians and even a couple of painters. It does involve time travel. I'll give you an example. I was sitting in the bathtub one day and my foot went into a seizure for a minute and I thought I was going to die. My heart started racing and my mind was racing and I thought about my life and I wished I had a picture of what my foot looked like to take to the doctor. It was like there was a crack between my big toe and the next toe. The next day I opened a book and saw this <http://www.fridakahlo.org/what-i-saw-in-the-water.jsp>. The painting looks just like my feet and how they felt and visually captures the essence of my life at that moment. My toenails were even painted red and I never paint my toenails. If I told you how many times this sort of thing happens to me you wouldn't believe it. I dream the future all the time too. It's usually mundane details though. Mostly plots of films I'll watch the next day. Like one where I gave a eulogy at the funeral of a person I didn't know and the next day watched a movie about a person who gives a eulogy at a funeral of a person he doesn't know. Synchronicity is everywhere. I was just wondering what Slavoj Žižek writes because I came across him on twitter and then you show me that Eric Wargo article. I believe it happens to everyone but we create a God outside ourselves is to protect ourselves from taking responsibility for events or in the case of the mother of Adam, giving credit where credit is due. It really can drive you mad if you let it and most people just can't face it. At some point I realized that justice is what rules and that if I've tapped into it and become almost one with it I have nothing to fear. I didn't always know the past and the future, as I walk the Tao it becomes stronger.

Speaking of Jeff Buckley there are people who remember him dying at different times. I wonder if Elizabeth Fraser had a music career in those realities. I guess there's one way to find out.....

And programmers too.

The next day I opened a book and saw this Wow, so dreamlike. You've manifested a pain-t(h)ing.

It really can drive you mad if you let it and most people just can't face it.

Well, the syncs reactions spectrum is very wide. It goes from the dreadful paranoia (like Jim Carrey in the "Number 23" movie) to the playful bliss.

At some point I realized that justice is what rules and that if I've tapped into it and become almost one with it I have nothing to fear.

What do you mean by "justice"? Something like karma?

[–]ElizaBulla 2 points 10 years ago

You could say karma, but justice works better because it's a literary concept. Even if it is a dream world and anything is theoretically possible the imagination moves along the paths of a story and what you think of yourself and others (which is actually a projection of what you think of yourself) effects what manifests more than any other factor. Stories, by their very nature operate according to the principles of justice. That's why we remember them. The mind clings to justice. The mind is justice. You may be the author of the story, but if you want to marry Cinderella you have to become a prince, and if you want to marry a prince and live happily ever after you're going to have to genuinely love your evil step-sisters and scrub some floors.

I just want to pipe in this old thread and say I was skeptical as fuck when I decided to try this. Within a single day owls started popping up. Watching futurama? Background billboards have owls. Checking the news? Blathers (an owl) amiibo was announced. And plenty of other instances of owls, despite me almost never encountering them before. Neat.

I'll have to try this again, along with the other exercises.

It's good, eh? It's a nice exercise because it doesn't require any specific intention or belief - it's pretty much dumb-mechanical - but it gets you thinking about how it is possible, and helps flatten your concept of "experiencing the world" into something more like an "imagination room".

Next up: Two Glasses Exercise

Hi, I'm very interested in this concept but quick question, are we actually supposed to do anything related to an owl or just be on the lookout for them?

permalinkembedsavereportreply

[–]TriumphantGeorge[S] 8 points 10 years ago*

You don't need to do anything, don't even be on the lookout for them. They know how to take care of themselves.

Just do this:

Right now, take five minutes and spend it imagining that there is an owl in front of you in this room - but before you begin, decide-that imagining this owl means-that "my life will be filled with owls from this moment onwards".

Then carry on with your life.

Um, the trademark is of course comedic™. Although the exercise does not happen in the way you are suggesting.

permalinkembedsaveparentreportreply

[–][deleted] 2 points 10 years ago

So retuning the channel, or editing the content is like shifting into 'a parallel world'. Wow! Like switching onto pre-existing train-tracks, roads, or paths, that don't really 'exist' unless we use them (incarnate into them)...I mean, a road isn't really a road unless cars drive down it right? ... This idea of the past rearranging itself is fascinating to me. I think the past does rearrange itself....

I get synchronicities all the time. A lot of the synchronicities I notice though pretty much every day, are my spoken words matching up with an emphasized word on TV, or said in a public space for example (along those lines of circumstance) and I point it out to people. This might be something different though...

I assume that our 3D reality is manifested following some 'etheric' programming that takes place at a level of reality above ours. And at that 'above level', things are nonlinear, so what might seem straightforward and connected in a very logical way at a higher density, or nonphysical level of reality, might manifest in our world in a very 'coincidental' way - synchronistic.

I like these ideas of programming our reality with thought, manifestation, and intent. It is empowering. Reality is very subjective, we all write our own lives.

[–]TriumphantGeorge[S] 3 points 10 years ago

So, it's like changing state - having a different set of patterns become more prominent. There are lots of different metaphors that can be used, but things like "TV channels" give you the feeling that there are states or patterns which are latent, they are just not currently "happening" until you trigger them into experience.

Synchronicities are an interesting side of it, definitely. It's very much a potential example of the "patterning" of experience - i.e. that both sensory experience and thoughts arise in the same perceptual space, and the same forms appear in both. If you see senses and thought as separate, this seems incredibly mysterious (how can the "outside world" know that I was thinking that?) but seeing the two as arisings within the same mental space makes it more palatable, and is a better starting point for contemplation and theorising.

I'd be wary of thinking of things as literally being levels (although it's a handy way to visualise things); I tend to think it better to try to connect everything to direct experience in some way. So for instance, you might play with the view that all potential experiences ("3D frames" of experience) are always present, always in the background, and it's just that some are much "brighter" than the others, and so dominate experience. A bit like how the daytime sky is dominated by the sun, but actually the stars are still there.

The only way to really investigate experience is, of course, to experiment with it, and see what happens. So long as we treat all experiences as just experiences, and don't get too caught up in the patterns we create (no "messages from God" or "signs we live in a computer simulation"), then this can only be beneficial, I'd say.

Hi! So I tried both the owl and two glass exercise. You say that after you do the exercises you should move on with your life and think about the exercises as little as possible.

I'm finding this hard to do because I have also been trying to cultivate my awareness for lucid dreaming (reality checks, questioning if I'm awake, trying to pay attention to details) so I find that my mind is trained to try to remember the details of my day (and dream content) and play them over. This makes it hard to let go and not think about owls or the glass exercise. Anyone else have this issue? Any suggestions on not overthinking?

permalinkembedsavereportreply

[–]TriumphantGeorge[S] 8 points 10 years ago*

You don't have to prevent thoughts about them - passing thoughts are inevitable, and that's totally fine. That's different from replaying things deliberately and tinkering with them.

If you think of every deliberate thought as being a direct interaction with the world, then you can see where this comes from: A passing thought is simply revealing the state of you-and-world as it is; let them pass and they will fade. A deliberate thought, meanwhile, increases the intensity and therefore the contribution of that pattern; choose them wisely.

The pouring of that water is the changing of the situational pattern. Literally. Your work is done, so there is no need to revisit it. The summoning of the owl is the intensification of the owl pattern; no need to do more.

Main points -

Let passing thoughts pass without intensifying them.

If you are actively thinking, then treat those thoughts as a direct intensification of those thought's patterns and therefore their contribution to your experience.

In general, if you are thinking actively, you should always be thinking from the end-state that you desire - not the start state or the process. Again, a thought = a literal increasing of the contribution of that pattern/state.

[–][deleted] 1 point 10 years ago

Great thank you, that is very helpful!!

permalinkembedsaveparentreportreply

[–]TriumphantGeorge[S] 2 points 10 years ago*

Welcome! There are all these "rules" that people have come up with over the years in systems like LOA, without giving the reasoning (or perhaps without even having a reason), so it's good to try and clarify.

The key is to remember that this is a "dumb" process. You are simply turning up the dial on some possible experiences while letting other ones fade out - either directly (the owls exercise) or indirectly (the glasses exercise). There is no intelligence at work other than you and your intention.

Be sure to report your results, here or in the other post as appropriate.

I wonder how this would work with something that you can't give a specific image, because it's not an object or you just do not know how it looks like until you see it / found it. Can be also a person you didn't met yet. Any suggestions?

[–]TriumphantGeorge[S] 3 points 10 years ago

I'd say, you summon the feeling that would be associated with it. Just as picturing an owl triggers all experiences associated with an owl image, so summoning a feeling triggers all experiences associated with that. (That's why some people advocate just generating a feeling linked with non-specific phrases like "oh, it's amazing!" and "life is so wonderful!")

The fact that you even have an idea of something you want, means you already have some sort of sensory fragment. So imagine what it would be like if that fragment were being experienced right now - rather than the seeing of the thing or whatever.

[–]HappyBengal 1 point 10 years ago

That sounds very plausible. It might be still difficult I guess, because I look for something I didn't experienced yet. I don't know what it would be like if that fragment were being experienced right know. All I have are assumptions. This makes it harder to recognize situations containing that fragment. I will try it anyway. Thank you!

[–]TriumphantGeorge[S] 2 points 10 years ago

I'd just intensify the fragment. That alone will also intensify the contribution of its extended pattern to your experience. Another trick: imagine that the air around you were being filled with the "atmosphere" of that fragment, its "essence". Feel that atmosphere become stronger and more prominent. Live with that as you go about your day.

permalinkembedsaveparentreportreply

[–]HappyBengal 1 point 10 years ago

I will try that out. I will let you know if I feel some changes over time. :)

permalinkembedsaveparentreportreply

[–][deleted] 1 point 10 years ago

It's crazy, but I'd been doing this with owls for almost a year before I read this, having independently come to the dimension jumping idea and started (on a lark) looking for owls as an (arbitrarily chosen) proof of synchronicity. They're fucking everywhere in my life now. Weird, right?

[–][deleted] 2 points 10 years ago

Wow. I actually became interested in owls as a positive sign a year or more ago. Three weeks ago, I made a job change and got all set up in my lovely new cubicle. About a week ago, I suddenly noticed that the person who vacated that cubicle a few months ago had left a push pin waayy up in the corner under one of the cabinets, stuck into the fabric, but it wasn't just an ordinary pushpin - The head of the pin was a beautiful, ivory-colored owl about 1/2 long! I've now placed it where I see it every day as I work.

PLEASE NOTE

This is the read-only archive of the Dimensional Jumping subreddit.

This is being maintained to ensure that the many valuable contributions our subscribers have made over the past couple of years remain available. All historical material is publicly viewable, however you will not be able to post or comment on this subreddit.

A new introduction will be added soon which will cover the history of the subreddit and its underlying concept, the thinking behind archiving the subreddit at this point - and details of its upcoming replacement project.

Many thanks to everyone who has gotten involved with this subreddit during its lifetime, even if it was just with their eyeballs!

INTRODUCTION

This is a place to share your personal experiences of the shifting nature of reality, through the deliberate application of techniques to bring about "jumps" in our personal worlds - in effect, switching to a more desirable universe.

Header No. 982 - Please note that a shift in your experience does not require a change in the header number, which should be treated as an emblem of change and a symbol of potential rather than an ID.

The hex colour for 982 is: #0003d6.

- Please browse the content in the links below before asking any questions.

OVERVIEW

The essence of Dimensional Jumping is the leveraging of perspective-structuring metaphors and the techniques derived from them:

Techniques - The original technique that began the subreddit is described in this introduction and is an easy way to get started. Alternative approaches which allow more control are also listed.

Active Metaphors - Try out the Hall of Records and Infinite Grid metaphors which illustrate why there is no "other you" involved in a jump. You are radically changing your experience, not swapping physical bodies. For a different perspective on subjective experience overall see The Imagination Room.

Demo Exercises - There are two easy exercises that you can do to prove to yourself whether there is anything to this: The Owls Of Eternity™ patterning exercise and the Two Glasses Exercise.

RULES

Please follow these guidelines to help make this a worthwhile project:

1 - Do not submit anything fictional. This subreddit is for the sharing of genuine anecdotes and techniques. There are other subreddits available for honing your story-making skills.

2 - Commenters should therefore assume the truth of OP's account. Failure to do this will result in deletion of your comment. It is for moderators to enforce Rule 1, not commenters.

3 - Links to possibly useful material should include discussion as to its relevance, and a personal review if possible.

4 - Posts about spontaneous unusual events are likely better directed to Glitch (events which make you question reality) or Mandela Effect (memories out of sync with the world).

5 - No spamming or you'll be banned from the subreddit.

6 - Do not downvote posters simply because they misunderstand something or have an idea you disagree with. If it contributes to the discussion and is in the spirit of the subreddit, it's all good.

7 - Be as friendly as possible. :-)

8 - Obey the rules.

IRC CHANNEL

There is currently no active IRC channel or other external group officially associated with the subreddit.

NOTE

There is no established theory of "jumping" or its mechanism, although there are numerous ways of viewing its nature.

It is for readers to decide for themselves through personal investigation and introspection whether jumping is appropriate for them or not.

An open mind combined with healthy caution is the correct mindset for all approaches targeted at the subjective experience.

Never believe something without personal evidence; never dismiss something without personal evidence.

What is the number?

Part of the original mythology is: maybe you can keep track of changes in your reality by referring to an anchor number or "Universe ID" for your dimension...

The Imagination of Neville Goddard (self.DimensionalJumping)

submitted 10 years ago * by TriumphantGeorge

One of the most eloquent promoters of the New Thought view that imagination affects experience was Neville Goddard. Although not strictly 'dimensional jumping', his ideas are one way that we can envisage "what fills the gap" - how new experiences are seeded in the gaps between moments.

Candles and mirrors and detached states are all very well, but the resultant shifts are a plunge into the unknown if you aren't clear about what dictates their direction.

This may sound familiar:

Self-abandonment! That is the secret. You must abandon yourself mentally to your wish fulfilled in your love for that state, and in doing, live in the new state and no more in the old state. You can't commit yourself to what you do not love, so the secret of self-commission is faith - plus love.

Faith is believing what is unbelievable. Commit yourself to the feeling of the wish fulfilled, in faith that this act of self-commission will become a reality. And it must become a reality because imagining creates reality.

-- The Law and the Promise, Neville Goddard

The world is imagination! Notice the mention of "feeling" as being fundamental to his technique (described elsewhere in the book). This is also emphasised in his The Power of Awareness, which is probably the better book.

Both are interesting reading though, if you can put aside some dated wording and the biblical references. Goddard viewed the Bible as a metaphorical guide to the true nature of reality, with 'God' and 'Jesus' and 'the son and the father' representing the process of creation and the relationship between imagination and the world as experienced.

EDIT1: All of Neville Goddard's books and lectures are out of copyright as far as I know and can be found free online in various formats. The opening sequence of Out of this World is particularly recommended for this subreddit for his quick-n-dirty overview of 4D thinking and manipulation; it'll mop up a few recent questions I reckon. And for the super-keen metaphor enthusiast, there's An Experiment With Time and The Serial Universe by JW Dunne (see overview).

EDIT2: A better resource with all of Neville's lectures, books and audio can be found

EDIT3: For a quick theory-free summary of Neville's approach: Imagination Creates Reality and Awakened Imagination.

EDIT4: Also The Pruning Shears of Revision captures the essence nicely, and the description of Eden sounds a bit like an Imagination Room.

bathing, 'daydreaming' after cannabis, 'going to sleep' are the most conducive moments to 'imagining the future' that i seem to possess the 'return' of action is clouded; i can't seem to pinpoint when i will see something. although logically that 'when' would be when i decide to see it...

so if i set the goal as awareness of buddha, with the means of a bodhisattva, it should lead to some return. of course, even a 'no-return' is informative but then leads to more world-searching...

right before waking up the day seems to be set (chuckle)

PLEASE NOTE

This is the read-only archive of the Dimensional Jumping subreddit.

This is being maintained to ensure that the many valuable contributions our subscribers have made over the past couple of years remain available. All historical material is publicly viewable, however you will not be able to post or comment on this subreddit.

A new introduction will be added soon which will cover the history of the subreddit and its underlying concept, the thinking behind archiving the subreddit at this point - and details of its upcoming replacement project.

Many thanks to everyone who has gotten involved with this subreddit during its lifetime, even if it was just with their eyeballs!

INTRODUCTION

This is a place to share your personal experiences of the shifting nature of reality, through the deliberate application of techniques to bring about "jumps" in our personal worlds - in effect, switching to a more desirable universe.

Header No. 982 - Please note that a shift in your experience does not require a change in the header number, which should be treated as an emblem of change and a symbol of potential rather than an ID.

The hex colour for 982 is: #0003d6.

- Please browse the content in the links below before asking any questions.

OVERVIEW

The essence of Dimensional Jumping is the leveraging of perspective-structuring metaphors and the techniques derived from them:

Techniques - The original technique that began the subreddit is described in this introduction and is an easy way to get started. Alternative approaches which allow more control are also listed.

Active Metaphors - Try out the Hall of Records and Infinite Grid metaphors which illustrate why there is no "other you" involved in a jump. You are radically changing your experience, not swapping physical bodies. For a different perspective on subjective experience overall see The Imagination Room.

Demo Exercises - There are two easy exercises that you can do to prove to yourself whether there is anything to this: The Owls Of Eternity™ patterning exercise and the Two Glasses Exercise.

RULES

Please follow these guidelines to help make this a worthwhile project:

1 - Do not submit anything fictional. This subreddit is for the sharing of genuine anecdotes and techniques. There are other subreddits available for honing your story-making skills.

2 - Commenters should therefore assume the truth of OP's account. Failure to do this will result in deletion of your comment. It is for moderators to enforce Rule 1, not commenters.

3 - Links to possibly useful material should include discussion as to its relevance, and a personal review if possible.

4 - Posts about spontaneous unusual events are likely better directed to Glitch (events which make you question reality) or Mandela Effect (memories out of sync with the world).

5 - No spamming or you'll be banned from the subreddit.

6 - Do not downvote posters simply because they misunderstand something or have an idea you disagree with. If it contributes to the discussion and is in the spirit of the subreddit, it's all good.

7 - Be as friendly as possible. :-)

8 - Obey the rules.

IRC CHANNEL

There is currently no active IRC channel or other external group officially associated with the subreddit.

NOTE

There is no established theory of "jumping" or its mechanism, although there are numerous ways of viewing its nature.

It is for readers to decide for themselves through personal investigation and introspection whether jumping is appropriate for them or not.

An open mind combined with healthy caution is the correct mindset for all approaches targeted at the subjective experience.

Never believe something without personal evidence; never dismiss something without personal evidence.

What is the number?

Part of the original mythology is: maybe you can keep track of changes in your reality by referring to an anchor number or "Universe ID" for your dimension...

How to jump between dimensions. (self.DimensionalJumping)

submitted 10 years ago * by TriumphantGeorge

Welcome to Dimensional Jumping (982)

Dimensional Jumping is a place to share your personal experiences of the shifting nature of reality, through the deliberate application of techniques to bring about "jumps" in our personal worlds - in effect, switching to a more desirable universe.

Below is the original method that kicked off this sub. However, there are different ways to approach this, and one flavour might suit you better than another (particularly if you don't like the idea of a literal "other you").

You might also choose to ask: "What's it all about?"

IMPORTANT NOTE

There is no established theory of "jumping" or its mechanism, although there are numerous ways of viewing its nature. It is for readers to decide for themselves through personal investigation and introspection whether jumping is appropriate for them or not. An open mind combined with healthy caution is the correct mindset for all approaches targeted at the subjective experience.

Never believe something without personal evidence; never dismiss something without personal evidence.

A useful overview is also provided in the sidebar of this subreddit.

The Act is The Fact - Part One: An Exercise

OVERVIEW OF METHODS

In essence, all of these describe the same technique: detaching from the current sensory pattern, allowing a formatting shift, and triggering a replacement (either by deliberate intending or by accidental alignment via mood association).

The mirror technique that began this subreddit (described below), which follows a traditional approach to detaching one's attentional focus to permit a formatting shift.

Neville Goddard's approach as described in books such as The Law and the Promise, which itself is based on ideas about the serial universe popularised by the likes of E Douglas Fawcett and JW Dunne.

Overwriting, Deciding and Patterning for extended pattern triggering and autocompletion.

Memory-block exploration via Infinite Grid and Hall of Records metaphor structuring.

Ebony Apu and the Hawk and Jackal system of Multidimensional Magick.

Direct creation of synchronicity (basically another version of the patterning approach). See Kirby Surprise's book, Synchronicity, and this related interview.

The key to doing things knowingly is to change your perspective philosophically; but understanding is not required for producing an effect. You may also find the concept of "persistent realms" to be useful.

THE MIRROR METHOD

This is the original mirror-gazing method by /u/Korrin85 which kicked off the subreddit:

First things first, you're going to need a mirror. The bigger the mirror the better. If you could theoretically walk through it all the better. It helps out a lot.

Best times to do this are at night. Most success happens at around 12-3, although you can still do it in the day time. Just harder.

Turn off all the lights, get rid of as much noise as possible, and sit facing the mirror. Have a candle between the mirror and you. Everything else around you should be dark.

Relax, clear your mind. Concentrate on your reflection. View your reflection as another YOU. A YOU from a different place. Call out to that YOU, whether it is out loud or in your head. Concentrate on switching places with that YOU.

It takes awhile, and some get it faster than others, but if you "shifted" from your current universe, you should feel something. Some of the signs for small shifts have been a brief feeling of movement, a moment of disorientation, or even your reflection blinking at you when you didn't blink. Bigger shifts include your reflection moving on it's own or even the feeling of you literally moving into the side. The bigger the shift, the more you feel.

If you feel any signs, STOP! Take a few days to note any changes. They can be small, like a scar on someone that has mysteriously disappeared or something being a different color. The more you shift, the bigger the differences you see.

Optional, but it works better if you have a "destination" in mind. For example, you can focus on you switching places with the YOU that has more money, or slightly better off in general.

Also check out Korrin's expanded guide which included answers to a few common questions.

How do you know if Reddit exists or not on the other dimension?

By going to said dimension.

Boom. Next question.

The way I understand it, for the swap to occur, another me from another dimension has to go in front of HIS mirror in HIS dimension. So, let's say you wanted to switch to a version of you with more money, he has the bad end of the stick.

Now, when you go in front of the mirror to change dimension, how do you know you are not responding to another dimension's you "call" and getting the bad end of the deal?

This might not make any sense so sorry if it doesn't.

It's a common question, but there is no other "you" necessarily. It's more like the dream your are having about being-a-person-in-a-world shifts dramatically. Check out the sidebar links or the other recommended links for details.

[–][deleted] 18 points 10 years ago

How does this theoretically work? Is there a reasoning behind it? This smacks of [mirror gazing], and a totally different result.

permalinkembedsavereportreply

[–]TriumphantGeorge[S] 29 points 10 years ago

Good question. The nature of this is that there is no "theory" as such because it is "before" observation, only metaphors.

This method is basically mirror gazing as a way to detachment and releasing intention (old magick style). The larger concept (see links in sidebar) is about re-patterning of experience, or the intentional creation of /r/Glitch_in_the_Matrix. Overall, I'd say the perspective is that of (philosophical) idealism and nonduality - updating your "private view" in the network within a mental universe.

Can we decide to not pick a destination? Would we survive if we just let our minds slip into an endless state of dimension changing? I'm asking because I wonder what the world would look like if you let yourself just keep dimension hopping until every single thing was different, including the environment and structures.

[–]TriumphantGeorge[S] 6 points 10 years ago

A partial version would be like having hypnagogic imagery and entering a new dream; in a complete version you'd have no memory of your previous states so it would be like being born again? Perhaps this is what happened when you started this life.

I've read some time ago about someone, who changed his eye colour, but since you want to change your whole appearance, the mirror method, the goddard approach or even the glass exercise won't do it for this one (most likely). In my opinion this is the most powerful method: overwriting yourself, because it offers you a maximum of detachment, maybe you will need some time to master it, but it's worth it Could I lose the ones I love by doing this? :(

[–]TriumphantGeorge[S] 9 points 10 years ago

Well, I wouldn't do it just for a laugh - you should have a specific intention in mind and have thought it through - but it's not like you are going to wake up and people have disappeared.

[–]psychedelic-jedi 6 points 10 years ago

Is it a bad idea to jump if you're currently in a bad/unstable state of mental health? Does that change at all? Is it possible to leave one state of mind behind?

permalinkembedsavereportreply

[–]TriumphantGeorge[S] 6 points 10 years ago*

A so-called "jump" is a change of state of the world, and that includes (or is) your own state. So I think it can be beneficial. Being in a bad state is more likely to affect your choices than anything else, rather than affecting the actual process. People have done it for all sorts of thing involving their personality, and since personality = apparent behaviour = apparent perception, this seems as good a target as anything.

Doing something like the Two Glasses Exercise for stability is a good approach I think; it can only assist.

Separately, if working towards being able to stabilise and direct your perception, I recommend experimenting with treating your ongoing experience as an "imagination space". The exercises in this chapter of The Michael Chekhov Handbook are definitely worth your time.

[–]psychedelic-jedi 2 points 10 years ago

Wow! Thank you for looking into this for me, I will definitely take advantage of those exercises. As fascinating as all of this is, one thing I'm worried about is rather than jumping into a better and more beneficial state of mind in my attempt, I accidentally jump into a worse and unfavorable state? Is that even possible, or am I just being paranoid? Just in case it happens, what chances do I have in finding a way out?

permalinkembedsaveparentreportreply

[–]TriumphantGeorge[S] 7 points 10 years ago

You're being paranoid!

Really this is about deliberate, intentional imagination and shifts. For instance, passing thoughts don't matter - they are just bubbles from your current state. It's deliberate thinking and movement and action that matters. Now, in the past you might have "accidentally deliberately" worked against yourself sometimes (in effect, fantasising about poor outcomes that concern you), but you won't be doing that anymore, will you?

But if you do end up in an unpleasant state, you'll now be armed with the approach to change it again. You'll always want to do occasional course correction anyway; that's just how it is. You can't fully anticipate everything that might arise in your life. Which is why it's worth living it in the first place!

For that method, it's just about having low light - so an electronic candle, or a small torch shining against the wall, etc.

[–][deleted] 4 points 10 years ago

It seems that at 17 black magic was done to me and I, everyone around me, my luck, my life...everything changed drastically...overnight. Could I have jumped by accident?? And do you guys ever heard of any link from black magic to dimension jumping?

permalinkembedsavereportreply

[–]TriumphantGeorge[S] 10 points 10 years ago

Hey. Well, "magic(k)" is just a name given to the deliberate changing of your experience without seeming to do so directly by contact in space and time. And "dimensional jumping" is a way of doing the same thing: shifting your experience to something resembling a new set of facts.

So one way to look at it: you had the experience of "someone doing black magic" and your subsequent facts-of-the-world shifted accordingly. But the world you are living in is your copy of the world; nothing happens without your allowing it (although you might allow things through ignorance); you can make changes directly if you decide to do so.

Are you still suffering from after-effects?

[–][deleted] 2 points 10 years ago

Sorry english is not my native tongue, is it magiK then?

Thanks so there's hope for me? Yeah it was getting worse until I found a way to stay at home. Basically everything that has been happening since 17 has been traumatic and just recently the doctor said my heart has a strange sound, so I guess it's getting into the physical cause emotionally and mentally I was already a wreck.

The most strange of things that I'm not finding in people's stories here is that you guys say 'subtle' for me people changed drastically, like they are ALL someone else, they are all meaner too. And the very rare good people who really liked me in the other dimension disappeared or... DIED.

[–]TriumphantGeorge[S] 2 points 10 years ago

The magick-with-a-k spelling was adopted by some groups to distinguish performance magic (Penn & Teller, David Blaine, Dynamo) from reality-manipulation (Aleister Crowley, The Golden Dawn, Chaos Magick), although it's not always used.

Great. Replying in the same place here if I might, it was you know like a church, people gather there with a belief, in this case it was the top medium's house, now I learned a lot about spiritual stuff and I can see it was a very dark thing going on there, I didn't know then but do now. I was there for a time, going back on weekends but they'd never tell me my mission. First the top one then the other mediums started ignoring me, or it felt like it. One day and now remembering, that was the day I was most ignored, no one talked to me and I felt really unwelcomed in my gut but still was waiting for them to tell me my mission in this life, that's when I flipped and passed out. Oh and after this they literally didn't want me there, I didn't want to go back either, f the message cause I overheard by accident they killed a chicken and as an animal lover that's a big no to me. I had vaguely knowledge that black magick or 'macumba' is done by killing poor animals.

[–]TriumphantGeorge[S] 13 points 10 years ago

You know what? That sounds like a cultish, unpleasant place and you should just wipe it from your mind and put it behind you.

If I may be so bold:

The best thing you will ever learn is that there is no "how it really is", no secret knowledge, and no mission you are on - except that which you adopt and pursue for yourself. If you go into the world looking for answers, what you'll get is a reflection of your own uncertainty, your own insecurities, or fragments of the theories you are holding at that moment. Nobody has ultimate power over you, none that you can't just take back.

So just treat right-now as fresh and think: how do you want the world to be, what kind of life do you want to be living? Then you can do some patterning stuff, and commit to that new state.

[–][deleted] 1 point 10 years ago

I guess, in my search for 'mission' I helped people, even strangers, volunteered for the elderly, became vegan and now rescue animals in the end I've seen many times I could just change missions, the important is to help someone alive _^ Thank you.

Would it be possible to choose where you shift to? A month ago, had I not done ONE thing and just did it the other way, my life would be perfect right now. Instead my life is in pieces. Two complete polar opposite worlds I could be living in right now based solely on one rash decision. I could have on a few occasions this past month fixed it, but again I made the wrong decision every time (I don't make good choices). I want to shift to one of the universes where I made the right choice.

I'm the last person to ever believe in this sort of thing and still 99.99999% don't, but I'm willing to try anything at this point.

permalinkembedsavereportreply

[–]TriumphantGeorge[S] 5 points 10 years ago

Who knows what might have happened, in terms of that perfection; that's always a bit of a imagination game. But you can definitely resurrect things, even though you've not played with this much before.

I'd suggest...

What's easiest is, focusing on what you want to happen right now, from here. The no-effort version is via the "plausible if very unlikely" path. More forcing: Neville Goddard (see links in last couple of edits).

permalinkembedsaveparent reportreply

[–]CyanGatorade 3 points 10 years ago*

I read a few of the comments.

When doing this, is it important to make my thoughts VERY clear and think about any possible negative side effects that this could cause (for example: say that the only way to get a wife/husband back is if they got terribly ill and you were there for them and THATS why you got back together) and then make small adjustments to my desired outcome to avoid negative side effects (example: include in the desired outcome that said lover is in good health).

What I'm trying to avoid basically is the whole genie situation where he grants you a wish, but he took it at it's most literal value and it turns out to be something you hadn't intended at all.

Should I just go and do it, or should I be wary about every outlandish/improbable side-effect and adjust them out of my desired outcome?

I feel like if I do that, I'm turning this thing into more of a legal contract than a natural thing.

Also...how important are the single words on the glasses? Are my overall intentions that I put into it more important?

[–]TriumphantGeorge[S] 4 points 10 years ago*

So, you don't need to do all that. It's true that you can't predict exactly how things will unfold until you experience it; it is literally a mystery. It's like laying one pattern on top of another: you can't tell what the result will be until you actually do it. (Hypothetically you could calculate it, but the world is too complex, and getting the data and performing the calculation would itself be an observation.)

However, it's not like a genie or a cantankerous god is doing this for you; there is no contract other than the design of the target. It's a "dumb" patterning system which generally results in the most efficient route that can be slid between your factual observations to date. I'd say: the back of your mind, simply have that your intention is for it to happen in the best way possible, or similar. If you do get restrictive, all you're doing is narrowing the possible things that can happen.

Remember, all change involves discomfort of some sort. You can have a different circumstance arise without this one being 'destroyed'. Maybe, occasionally, a bit of 'trial' is how things will happen - but that's where having 'faith' comes in: you know that this is a shift towards your desired state, so you ride with it.

In terms of the labels, they are just meant to encapsulate the current and target situations. In other words, you're not meant to be writing out a description as if you were sending out a request - rather, you have in mind the situation, and see what word (the "handle") arises from that. It's okay to use more than one word, definitely; but remember it's just meant to be the essence of the situation/intention so that you have appropriate labels for the glasses.

This is no "asking the universe" type deal. It's a direct interaction with, and shifting of, the world-pattern. So don't worry about the details, just specify your target state and the idea that you want the best of the world also.

[–]crimsonhunter 5 points 10 years ago

Stupid question, but we shouldn't try this if we kids, right? I wouldn't want to do anything that would leave them back in another dimension with a different version of me....or do something to change their lives for the worse.

permalinkembedsavereportreply

[–]TriumphantGeorge[S] 12 points 10 years ago

If it worked that way, they'd be left with the same version of you. But read the sidebar links: it's not quite like that.

permalinkembedsaveparentreportreply

[–]vasavasorum 7 points 10 years ago

So basically I just have to try really hard to fall prey to confirmation bias and wishful thinking and then I'll have jumped?

Maybe ad hoc a couple of things too?

God forbid if I post hoc in any way, though.

permalinkembedsavereportreply

[–]TriumphantGeorge[S] 4 points 10 years ago

Well, nobody's making you post-, ad-, or any other hoc, right? It's pretty easy to avoid confirmation bias if you're a skeptic (in the proper sense of the term). Maybe you mean the frequency illusion? You can take steps there too. Results are coincidences? Conduct further experiments to establish a causal connection (or indeed to disprove one).

As the sidebar says:

Never believe something without personal evidence; never dismiss something without personal evidence.

Or you can just not bother, of course. Having no view on the matter is a third and perfectly reasonable position to take. (In fact, that should be your default view on pretty much everything, I'd say. Ideas you have no direct experience of are basically just stories. They might be useful stories; but there's no need to believe in them.)

[–]vasavasorum 8 points 10 years ago*

No, no, I really want to have a definite view on this.

Nobody, as in no person, subjects myself to biases, except, well, myself. Our brains work in such a way that being biased is more common than being unbiased. There are plenty robust psychological studies that point to that, I can refer you to some if you so wish (or you can just google them). "Personal" evidence is just a fancy name for... confirmation bias! "I saw it, it happened, therefore it must be true!". It doesn't work like that, unfortunately. You have to have a control to compare with your variable and avoid biases.

So let's plan an experiment: I'm a skeptic and I go to my mirror with my candle at the proper hour of the night and attempt the jump. But before that, I take notice of a few things: my own scar in my forehead, the number I wrote down that says 882 (and I, just to be sure, write down 882 in other places: in my computer's notepad and my phone's note app) and, finally, the weather (which is terribly cloudy and I want it to be as clear as the caribbean ocean).

I attempt the jump and, after that, I check my variables. If I really wished for them to have changed (my scar to disappear, the number 882 to have changed to 323 and the sky to clear up) and they didn't, then is the experiment a failure and jumps are unreal? Or did I just not wish it enough for it to happen? Do you have to believe in it for it to be real?

Well, that's post-hoc and it's older than Jesus Christ.

Edit.: I wholly disagree: it's very hard to avoid confirmation bias, even as a hardcore skeptic.

Edit 2.: grammar

Edit 3.: A bit different from frequency fallacy. It's a mix of confirmation bias (which would be the foundation of the false belief) with congruence bias.

permalinkembedsaveparentreportreply

[–]TriumphantGeorge[S] 8 points 10 years ago*

Okay, let's maybe rewind a bit and work through this step by step? Excuse formatting and mild errors because mobile, etc. EDIT: And also length, it turns out. EDIT2: Added headings.

What Are We Trying To Prove?

We'll perhaps begin with:

What, exactly, would we be trying to prove to ourselves here, by experimenting with one of these methods?

I would suggest: what we would be trying to prove is not that there is something called "dimensional jumping" - because that is just a metaphor, a conceptual framework.

Rather, we are trying to demonstrate to ourselves that we can, through some act or practice, bring about personal experiences which correspond to our intention or desire.

Meanwhile, "personal experience" is evidence that... you had a particular experience. Anything beyond that is storytelling. Even if you replicate the experience, and even if you get others to replicate it, all that you prove is that there is an "observable regularity" to your experience. Any conceptual framework you erect around is a connective fiction; it is not "what is really happening".

So to emphasise: "jumping" and the associated metaphors would be simply a way of thinking about this, a convenient narrative which provides a conceptual framework for those observations. But the observations would come first. The observations are all that is "true".

Returning to confirmation bias, let's go with the streamlined definition:

"Confirmation bias (or confirmatory bias) is a tendency to search for or interpret information in a way that confirms one's preconceptions, leading to statistical errors."

So-called "jumping" asserts that there is, in fact, no underlying interpretation to any observed changes brought about by its approach. There is no "how it works" in particular. There are ways of conceiving of change, but those are not descriptions of how change occurs.

What we are left with is:

Is the fact of observing a change, a sign that one's prior act was causal in some way? No. One case of this would be a (literal) coincidence. Many cases might be a correlation. But at no stage would you have to commit to the notion that it was "true" that performing an exercise "caused" a result. And you would certainly not confuse any of the metaphors for a "causal mechanism" that was happening behind the scenes.

What Could We Confirm?

So what you end up with is only ever, at best:

A correlation between the content of two experiences, in this case:

An experience of "my body and thoughts performing an intentional act".

A subsequent experience of "being in a situation whose content corresponds to the intention".

A selection of conceptual frameworks which assist us when thinking about those correlations.

If you never witness a correlation, then you never witnessed a correlation. How you interpret that, is up to you - just as if you get a "positive" result. You might say, "Maybe I didn't believe in it enough!" Okay, that's one theory. Maybe you could try again and believe in it more. Not sure how you do that though. Or you might say, "Maybe it just doesn't work." Well, it definitely didn't work that time, that's for sure.

In short, if people "want to believe" then they always go looking for signs and confirmation. That's true in science, psychology, everyday life, and this. It is independent of the particular topic. It's up to you how you approach things. And my personal approach: why believe anything? Abstract concepts and beliefs are always wrong in the sense of not being how it is. (N David Mermin has a nice take on this, I think.)

The benchmark instead should be:

Is it useful for your purpose?

TL;DR Summary

Trying to bring this together in to some sort of overview:

Aiming to prove that concepts are true is the wrong approach. They never are; they are merely useful or not-useful when pursuing a particular outcome.

"Understanding" is not a useful outcome unless it is applied in the service of producing other outcomes; because all "understandings" are merely "connective fictions" or metaphors.

"Jumping" is metaphor which can be used for thinking about observed correlations between certain personal acts and subsequent personal experiences. It is not "true" apart from this - and that is fine.

Okay, that's a lot better. That is somewhat what I could infer by reading the sidebar (yes, I really read it!), but, after looking through the comments and the answer to those comments (both by yourself and other users), it becomes clear that, although you have said it was a metaphor a couple of times, the general understanding seems to be that dimensions, realities, or whatever you call it have been changed because something happened due to the activity of going to the mirror and so forth.

Now, you are correct to say that all we get are observations that are not the reality of things, but that does not make changing of realities true that does not make the observations true (if they're not controlled for bias and randomness, you get such a very weak evidence of a pattern that it's more useful to dismiss it). Truth is the reality of facts, independent from whomever is observing. While we have physical obstacles to get truth in it's purest form, there is one way to best approach it, which is systematically, through the scientific method. That's exactly what it is and it knows it's limitations, that's why it accounts for the ever-changing nature of science.

A correlation is a correlation is a correlation. But "correlation is not causation", so basically you just observed that A is A and that tells you nothing else. You're spot on by saying that you're limited in drawing a conceptual framework from that, but you should do it and apply scrutiny to that framework, systematically. If it fails it fails, move on to the next or give up.

If people want to believe something that isn't real and that makes them feel better, good. They can either continue that or refrain from insisting. It's irrelevant. But they should be aware that it's just a mental trick, which is far from what most people seem to be claiming here. If I'm 100% wrong about what I'm supposing, then that's that, there's no point whatsoever in my arguments, I'd just be repeating things that most people know.

Why believe anything? Because there's a systematical way to best approach truth, and it gives you an efficient way of shaping your surroundings with technology, medicine and science in general. Mental tricks might make you feel good. If that's what you want, awesome.

Aiming to prove that something is real or isn't real is the only approach if you aim to understand how the Universe works. You might not have a perfect framework of the Universe ever, but if you can approach it with a good enough proximity that you can predict outcomes and shape surroundings with efficiency, then that's exactly what should be done.

Long story short, it seems that this sub is thriving on the misconception that this mental trick (although being said a few times that it's a metaphor) is a real way of changing/altering realities. That's the only explanation for comments such as "someone's scar disappeared" or "that building isn't there anymore" or "the numbers changed" or "what if there's no reddit in the other dimension?". That's false marketing.

I apologize in advance for grammar errors, there are probably many in my text.

Edit.: strikethrough and the parenthesis after that, for clarification.

Edit 2.: answering your edits:

"Understanding" is not a useful outcome unless it is applied in the service of producing other outcomes; because all "understandings" are merely "connective fictions" or metaphors.

If the so called "connective fictions" can be used to predict outcomes, then it is a good approach to the reality of facts, which means they are extremely useful and efficient. That's how you have technology, science, mathematics and so forth. If these "connective fictions" can be proven to predict outcomes, by means of experimenting, then they're based in evidence and they evolve to "connective fictions that are very close to reality". And so it is not fiction any more, just an incomplete framework of reality. If we're talking about philosophy, then, yes, it stops at fiction. Which can still be useful, as long as people are aware of its weakness in reflecting reality.

"Jumping" is metaphor which can be used for thinking about observed correlations between certain personal acts and subsequent personal experiences. It is not "true" apart from this - and that is fine.

Correlation is not causation. I can say that the bird is yellow because it stayed too long under the sun, but that's not the same as explaining the biological pigment inside its cells that reflect the yellow light wavelength. One of them can be tested and used to predict similar outcomes. There is no utility in saying that they're both true (or good approximations of truth) just because it's a metaphor for correlation! Wittgenstein would be going crazy with your unorthodox use of such a fundamental word!

All in all, you seem to neglect the strength of evidence that different conceptual frameworks have. Again, it has been shown by way of prediction and experimenting that a particular framework might be a better approximation of reality than another.

Firstly, I suppose it's best to clear something up: nothing is being marketed in terms of a way of thinking - there's not even the promotion of a particular worldview as fact, only as conceptual framework. If there's anything being consistently adhered to, it's more of a meta-position akin to philosophical idealism: begin from direct experience, proceed from there.

Okay, let's continue (interesting discussion), and I'd begin by saying that this is a problematic phrase:

Truth is the reality of facts, independent from whomever is observing.

It's laden with presuppositions, but that's not necessarily important. Science doesn't get at any of those things, nor is it intended to. That is philosophy.

Science is an approach whereby the subset of observed regularities in personal experience which can be intersubjectively agreed upon in language, are abstracted as conceptual frameworks. (Although there is some interplay between observation, language and concepts here, as any anthropologist would tell you.)

More leanly:

Science in effect is the study of a subset of subjective personal experience that can be easily communicated intersubjectively.

Are we suggesting that everything which falls outside of this remit would be a "mental trick"?

[–]vasavasorum 3 points 10 years ago

I have to disagree with your first paragraph, it's quite obvious and recurrent that the notion of a real change of reality is happening amongst users! I don't mean to make a personal accusation (I'm not saying you're responsible for this), but I haven't seen any comments in here thoroughly explaining that it's just a mind experience (and honestly, the "changing of scars, buildings and numbers" is still unaccounted for - that gives substance to the "change of reality" theory).

Actually, the only presupposition to that is that reality is... real. If reality is real, even if it's only inside our minds, even as a simulation, it's out there. And truth is the reality of its facts. It will be there if I die, if everyone dies, it'll still be there just so long as it is still there.

There are loads of subjectivity in science, some of which are the one you pointed out, and that's why we will probably never reach the actual truth about reality.

BUT, and that's a big BUT, we can approach it substantially with a systematical model.

And what I mean by that is...

Science in effect is the study of a subset of subjective personal experience that can be easily communicated intersubjectively.

... that science does not get trapped inside the aforementioned definition of yours. In actuality, that is a very good definition for... philosophy!

The scientific method is here to weaken the subjectivity inherent to us mortal humans and get some control over what changes (the variables and the control groups). Therefore, after multiple testing and statistical analysis and reproducing, you get robust evidence in favour or against a conceptual framework. That's all you get - you don't get confirmation!

So systematically approaching reality is much better than just observing and supposing, because the former accounts for biases and statistical errors but the latter does not.

And it is in there the difference between approaching reality as best as possible and simple conjecture.

Very interesting discussion (thank you for this!), I really enjoy talking about this subject.

This is good. Okay...

It's unlikely anyone would say "it's just a mind experience" I suppose, because that would be redundant. All experience is a "mind experience". Although what you're actually trying to say is that, if someone reports experiencing an apparent change in their environment of that nature, they should be told it is "not real"? The problem with this is, to do that we'd have to be able to say how, exactly, it came about. I don't think there's a way to do that.

I'm not sure what you mean by "reality is... real"? Do you mean that there is an independent, persistent, consistent substrate which underpins all experience? That isn't at all clear. Science certainly lets us identify those aspects of experience which seem to be persistent and consistent, but it can't really address the nature of this, nor claim that this is all there is.

That science is a systematic (ideally anyway) approach to gathering evidence that suggests, supports, and perhaps later contradicts conceptual frameworks - of course. But that evidence is always experienced subjectively. What science does (quite rightly) is in effect throw away all the aspects of subjective experience which cannot be confirmed intersubjectively = the objective frame.

However, that doesn't say anything about "reality" at all. It is instead something like:

The best account of the those elements of subjective experience which can be: a) correlated intersubjectively, and; b) described in terms of available language. Which is great. And you could define that subset of experience as "the real", however you'd then need another term for "how things actually are" because this is only a subset of that.

Aside: Don't think that I am science bashing here. I'm a big fan and did physics before escaping for the cash. But I think it's important to pay attention to what we are actually doing in science, rather than the story about what we are doing.

[–]vasavasorum 3 points 10 years ago*

It is redundant if you take the stance that all experience is a mind experience (true), but the "mind self-deception" is in desperate need of being acknowledged here.

I don't mean they should be told that it's "not real", but that they're more likely (not definitely, only more likely) to be subjected to cognitive bias. If they control for bias and get the same results then we're on to something! I don't think we need to be exact (it's too hard, maybe impossible?), but we must strive for being as close as possible to the exact. And for that, again, one needs to control for biases.

What I mean by "reality is... real" is that, to presuppose that truth is the reality of facts, you need only presuppose that reality is here! That all this is actually happening (regardless of in which way it is happening). And then "truth" is the word used to describe how reality actually is, regardless of it matching what we think is true or not.

Agree with the statement that science can't claim what the nature of reality is (only approximate) and neither claim that this is all there is (as of now, that statement is unverifiable - one can only make an informed guess).

I don't think we should describe that as "the real", for the precise reason you gave.

Yes, science is full of holes and scams: that's exactly my problem with claiming that something is true or that it contains robust evidence of working. Pseudoscience is often very well disguised as science, and I'm particularly disgusted by the sham that is tricking people into believing something (I'm not saying that that's what you're doing here!).

All in all, what I want to clarify here is that: jumping dimensions/realities/temporal lines is something highly (so high that it's best not to conceive of it unless there is overwhelming evidence) unlikely to occur in the present moment - thus the need to control for biases (which has a very high likelihood of explaining an exceptional phenomena, especially a purely mental one - not "mental" as having the same meaning that we used for "every experience is a mental exercise", but as in it occurs purely by the action of thoughts). The multiverse hypothesis is not even verified yet, we don't know if that's a good description of how reality works - imagine jumping multiverses by simple force of thought! So, sure, if one does the dimensional jumping for fun or because it makes one feel good, go ahead, I have nothing to do with that. But let us all be aware of what it is. Let's be crystal clear, because trying to come up with a good approach of describing reality is already so, so, so hard that we shouldn't pollute it with misconceptions, either deliberately or not.

[–]TriumphantGeorge[S] 2 points 10 years ago

I'm going to flip my response around here, since it might make it a clearer read.

On the multiverse hypothesis in quantum mechanics: as science, despite the enthusiastic articles in popular science magazines, it's rubbish. Quantum mechanics is a mathematical formulation which predicts the set of potential outcomes from a particular, well-defined situation. Any step we take beyond that, is philosophy or metaphysics, and there's no way to distinguish between the options.

Which is completely fine. So long as we bear in mind that this is what we're dealing with. A quantum mechanics experiment produces an outcome; the multiverse theory is a way of thinking about it. "Multiverses" can never be distinguished from other interpretations, so they are not scientific. You might infer that the results of your experiment are consistent with the concept of a multiverse, for sure, but you cannot establish them as the best description. You can merely find that description a useful way of conceptualising the fact of the observed result.

[Aside - It is interesting to note that some recent interpretations of QM, such as QBism, are switching to a subjective frame and essentially deferring worrying about the objective frame since it is basically inaccessible (effectively non-existent, others might say).]

In the same sense "dimensional jumping" is not literally jumping dimensions, because the very idea of a dimension is unfalsifiable. Which is why it doesn't claim to be that (the term is actually an unfortunate leftover; it's not something I would have chosen). In fact, you'll note that the whole subreddit is very much geared towards: do not believe in any explanation. Do an experiment and see what happens. Any descriptions are at the philosophical and metaphysical level.

[Aside - Slightly retreading here, but: I would say science cannot even approximate the nature of reality, but what it can do is get better and better at creating self-consistent descriptions for the subset of observations that fall within its domain. By "nature" of reality I mean, what is the nature of experiencing itself. Because all of our evidence is made from that.]

So this probably leads us to something like, that the perspective of this subreddit is something like this:

It is suggested that by performing certain exercises one can have subjective experiences which correspond to one's intention. Only you can satisfy yourself of this; it is not a matter of belief.

No claims are made as to the underlying nature of these experiences, because it is inherently inaccessible to study. (Although see 4.)

However, certain philosophical or metaphysical frameworks can be useful in conceptualising the nature of experience and the apparent results.

Finally, there are approaches to better comprehending the subjective experience from within the subjective frame. However, they are not useful for objective frame modelling because they are "before" that.

The word "subjective" is not intended in a dismissive sense; it is a recognition that such experiences are by their nature "before" objective concepts.

So a couple of questions which might spur us on in interesting directions:

Do you believe in an objective reality? If so, why and in what sense, exactly?

How would we test for "mind self-deception" in quite practical terms?

permalinkembedsaveparentreportreply

[–]vasavasorum 1 point 10 years ago

Are we suggesting that everything which falls outside of this remit would be a "mental trick"?

The simple fact that there is no evidence in favour of the "mental trick" theory does not automatically make it a mental trick. It only makes it a theory with no evidence in favour of it (or, more commonly, with weak evidence). But the fact that the "mental trick" theory has both weak evidence (or anecdotal, at best) and is very simply described by a mental exercise in which people fall prey to cognitive biases does make it a mental trick.

If you tested it and controlled for cognitive biases and showed that there were no biases and no evidence, then it's just got weak evidence. If there is both bias and no evidence, then it's a mental trick. If it's got no biases and strong evidence, then it's a scientific phenomenon.

P.S.: I'm sorry if I'm answering too quickly and not giving enough time for proper edits. I'll be more polite next time and wait a little longer.

I'm new to this subreddit and I was wondering if staring into your reflection of a webcam could have the same effect? I've done this countless times in the past and just started reading about dimensional jumping. I hope this isn't a "stupid question"

Is there anyone willing to help me with a few questions I have?

Thank you for your time.

There are no stupid questions! The "mirror technique" is really a technique for providing a low-light-level focal point that allows detachment. You could try a webcam image - my first thought is that the "correctness" of the orientation might be distracting, but you could flip that round in software, I imagine. Experiment and see!

Anything else?

I made a post the other day and I'll just direct you there rather than reposting the questions I had asked. I hope that's okay.

https://www.reddit.com/r/DimensionalJumping/comments/3qqwd6/need_advice_about_jumping/

I tend to keep my room super dark other than a dim nightlight behind me and my laptop screen is always dim also. My Webcam settings are currently set so that my Webcam displays flipped in a mirror like image within the software. So it has a lot of elements of the mirror technique.

Thank you for any help(:

Sounds fine, then. As I say, there's nothing "special" about mirrors, necessarily - although they do lend themselves to symbolic meaning when it comes to the metaphor of "dimensions", and mirrors are used in certain traditions, it's fine to experiment there.

I have a question about the "Just Decide" exercise. How long should we be "deciding" to get up? I realize it might not work right away or for the first couple times. As much as I want to eventually jump dimensions, I want to still be doing other things (at least, building good habits when the time comes to jump).

I can imagine it eating up a huge chunk of time if it doesn't work right away.

[–]TriumphantGeorge[S] 4 points 10 years ago

Well, how I'd approach: every day, just for general life improvement, you should be doing a ten minute session of lying on the floor and "playing dead and giving up". At the end of that, you should... continue to do nothing. No more than an ten additional minutes.

The key to all of this is to cease holding onto your attentional focus.

Most people have the habit of narrowing their focus when they intend things - e.g doing computer stuff or whatever, or even walking to the door. You don't need to do that. And it actually locks you in state and opposes any shift! Leave your attention open to roam as it likes, and let the movement follow your intention.

So when you are "playing dead", you let your body, mind and attention move freely. And then when it's time to get up, the intention leads to the movement with no manipulation of attention (it'll feel like it "just happens", because you won't experience any "doing"). But note: this is not required for making changes, it just makes things effortless because you've ceased to oppose shifts in your world; it makes just moving around doing everyday stuff as a body feel pretty nice.

Another thing you can try is to imagine you are the background space in the room, rather than a body inside it. This releases "holding" quite efficiently.

[–]Silentswiftly 1 point 10 years ago

Can you explain more about the "intend" part? This is one of your exercises which I've had no results with because I can't understand exactly what you mean by intend.

So my body, mind and attention are moving freely. Does this mean I could be thinking of random things since my mind is moving freely, or am I thinking of nothing and just relaxing? Do I summon the "feeling" that it is now true that I will be standing up while keeping my attention away from my body?

I understand that this is hard to put into language for you. Thanks for any help.

permalinkembedsaveparentreportreply

[–]TriumphantGeorge[S] 1 point 10 years ago*

Yeah, it's not easy to describe "intending". It has been described elsewhere as:

"To wish without wishing, to do without doing, there is no technique to intending, one simply intends."

Which is perhaps not very helpful.

My best description would be, that to intend is to "change your shape" such that something is true. So if the world was a landscape, and you were that world, then to intend it to be different would be to simply shift yourself so that you take on the shape of the new situation, the new contours. In this case, you are changing the landscape such that your body will be getting up.

What the exercise is meant to demonstrate to you is that any "action" you perform, that you feel yourself doing, in order to cause change, is superfluous. It's all just theatre you engage in to experience yourself "causing". In this exercise you don't cause anything, you simply intend it to be so - assert the fact of it - and it will happen subsequently.

So you lie down and, having simply intended that you will get up, your work is done and it is already true. You remain non-attached ("you are okay with whatever happens") and "getting up" will come into experience by itself.

If that's not working for you, then try this description:

Centre your attention near your forehead, a couple of inches back, thereby withdrawing your "presence" from the rest of your body. Then:

"Wish" to stand up but don't do anything about it, instead remain centred in the forehead, and allow whatever arises to unfold without interference.

This is a zone empty of sensory experience so you don't trigger your nervous system habits. What's probably happening is that you are re-triggering the "my body is in position" pattern. (If you do the letting-go exercise for long enough, this will fade in its own time, which is when successful "spontaneous" movement kicks in.)

I get that because this is experiential it's not easy to read and then replicate, without someone able to guide you in person.

Hey :3 I have a question: if I want something simple like... I want to be skinnier or I want to be a Little bit taller or something like that, can the rest of the world also change or just my appearance? I mean... I would do this thing but I would like to know if anything else that affects the rest of the world or people around me could happen... I love my life as it is but I would just try and do this thing with just a few little things to see what happens.

[–]TriumphantGeorge[S] 2 points 10 years ago

Well, things are gonna change anyway, right?

Even if you got skinnier by going on a massive diet, or got taller by (um) going on a rack, those actions would have repercussions - even if that's because you'd have to go shopping to get different sized clothes, and so would take a trip you wouldn't have, meaning you met other people, maybe you taste in clothes shifted a bit into a new style...

So it's just the same except the changes happen faster, and sometimes it's hard to work out the link between one and the other because it's not logically connected.

Anyway, if you just want to "look and see", then pick a situation that is a problem right now, maybe like a interpersonal problem, that is unlikely to solve itself - and do the The Glasses Exercise.

Or you could try deliberately creating synchronicity by spending 5-10 minutes imagining that an owl is sat there in front of you, just sitting and looking at the imaginary owl, with the idea that you want "owls to fill your life from now on".

Both are "a bit of fun" but will likely teach you something about how you feel about this stuff really.

You know why it's better at night? Because the body enters lucid state much easier. Of course you are not traveling anywhere.

The kind of thing described here violates the second rule of thermodynamics.

If you claim that you can violate rules of thermodynamics with a mirror you should be a leader of the earth by now.

Of course it's impossible if you claim this show some proof. Of course you have no proof.

I love how little kids claim to violate fundamental laws of physics yet show 0 proof of any sort.

permalinkembedsavereportreply

[–]TriumphantGeorge[S] 2 points 10 years ago

That rather misses the point, no? Certainly you are not traveling anywhere physically.

Although you might want to define: what is a law of thermodynamics, exactly? Shortly after that, I'd like you to prove to me that you are a conscious being who experiences thoughts and sensations. ;-)

[–]realister 0 points 10 years ago

Unfortunately the burden of proof is not on me on this one if you claim to have violated fundamental laws of physics it's you who needs to provide proof. That is an extraordinary claim and extraordinary claims require extraordinary evidence otherwise it's nothing but a delusion.

Burden of proof lies on the person stating a claim. I can't prove a negative that's not how it works.

Your mind and your thoughts have full physical representation. What do you think the mind is?

I think you watched too much Interstellar. Thoughts have physical representations and abide by rules of thermodynamics. If you claim you can violate them the burden of proof lies in you.

permalinkembedsaveparentreportreply

[–]TriumphantGeorge[S] 4 points 10 years ago

What do I have to prove exactly, and to whom, and why?

You're going to have to wade into some metaphysics so we can be clear about where you're coming from:

How do you determine that something is "physical" rather than, say, "mental"?

What is a "thought", exactly, and how is it detected?

What is a "law of physics", how are they arrived at, and how does it influence reality?

In answer to your question, "mind" is a poorly-defined word whose meaning varies depending on context, but I will define it as:

"A term used to indicate a 'container' concept in which it is envisaged that personal thoughts, sensations and perceptions arise as a conscious experience"

[–]realister -2 points 10 years ago

You don't have to prove anything but if you are making an extraordinary claim without any evidence and we all know extraordinary claims require extraordinary evidence then don't be surprised nobody takes you seriously.

permalinkembedsaveparentreportreply

[–]TriumphantGeorge[S] 7 points 10 years ago*

I'd say you've got it the wrong way around. Nobody can give you evidence of anything ("extraordinary" or not). All they can do is point you towards an experience that will indicate to you that the world is a certain way (or not). They can say "I did this, this happened; you try it too, see if it happens for you".

This is true of all physics too, but because we have become accustomed to certain experiences, or thinking in certain ways, or accepting second-hand evidence, we tend to forget an important fact:

Experiences are all that is true, everything else is imagined. All claims are actually pointers indicating a potential experience - or they are not claims at all.

From elsewhere:

My own guidelines are: experiences are real experiences; explanations are useful narratives. We must be careful not to treat the concepts we invent as actual things, even when they seem to work really well. Our observations are what define our stories, our stories don't define what it is possible to observe. That's why we should welcome different ideas, because fragments of them might be useful later on.

(Strongly recommend the linked article from N. David Mermin, by the way. A related Nature article about QBism is also worth everyone's time.)

I wasn't being facetious when I asked about whether you could prove you were conscious. Some well-known scientists have (in effect) claimed that awareness is an "illusion" because it cannot be observed non-subjectively. It is important to contemplate these things.

Do you require other people to have a model fully describing consciousness, thoughts, dreams, perception before you will believe they exist? Because that is like saying you will not believe your own observations until there is an explanation for them. Which is science inverted and rendered meaningless!

This gets to the heart of what is being explored here.

OVERVIEW

Oneirosophy means "dream wisdom"

This is a place for idealists to further their lucidity by discussing techniques and anything else related to idealism.

Techniques may include but are not limited to: contemplation of skillful ideas, meditation, magick, yoga, and lucid dreaming. Sympathetic individuals are encouraged to post their own ideas and practices to prompt discussion.

The foundations of Oneirosophy are:

Lucidity - A state similar to gnosis or satori where one regains consciousness of the illusory nature of waking reality, just as one becomes lucid in a dream.

* Idealism -* All of waking reality is a mental structure, a dreamed reality. Note that a partial reading list is available for background and for inspiration.

Matter is an idea in the mind.

Super-Simplified Models of Reality (self.Oneirosophy)

submitted 10 years ago * by TriumphantGeorge

One of the outcomes of Oneirosophy is that, since all experience is effectively dreamlike and is you, we recognise that models of reality are pretty arbitrary and pattern-based.

However, we do usually feel we need of some model or metaphor in order to contemplate and direct our experience. And indeed, it is discovered that a fully absorbed model itself behaves as an "active metaphor" which shapes our experience.

I was briefly musing about what the most basic but useable version of my idea of reality would be, ending up with the text below.

TG's Super-Simplified Reality Model™

Think of yourself as an open holographic conscious space.

All patterns are present right now and active right now, dissolved into this space. Nothing is hidden or elsewhere; such patterns are simply not activated at an intensity level that is noticeable.

Meanwhile, there is no time or space, other than as a formatting pattern.

All content is 'imagination'.

To bring something into experience, we imagine or recall that pattern. We do this simply by intending to do so. Everything else is then completely automatic.

The first step is to decide to enter a state of detachment and absolute allowing. This is to cease the re-activation of current patterns and allow them to yield or subside.

Optionally, one may also spend time imagining an open empty space, in order to clear oneself of residual experience.

From then on, one does intending-imagining to trigger experiences you want to have.

Our identification should be with the open space, rather than with any particular piece of content that appears within it.

I like that you put a trademark this time.

Our identification should be with the open space, rather than with any particular piece of content that appears within it.

I think this is the part that's hardest for most people. I want to highlight that so that maybe we can make it easier for everyone on a whole. The reason it's so tricky, I believe, is the language we use in daily convention is built around the notion that you are a physical body and the world is a physical place. If you're a particularly socially active person, you'll be very hard pressed to maintain the awareness that you are, in fact, the whole experience, and not the body of Joe Somebody talking to Susy Cuteface. You're experiencing that, sure, but because language is going to likely encourage you to use the words "I" referring to Joe Somebody, you will easily slip back into the notion that Joe Somebody is the all encompassing identity of who you are. It happens so quickly and is usually not noticed until you take a moment to reflect on who you actually are.

So a word of advice, if you are socially active or a regular member of society - whatever that means - take some time in isolation to work on this stuff. However much you've got, the more the better. If you can't go more than a few seconds being aware that you are everything (and nothing) and not just "a guy" or "a gal," then trying to figure that out while you're in the midst of the play of human society is going to drive you nuts.

TG has a pretty good releasing exercise I'll try to find, otherwise "regular" meditation works. Which by the way, is not the act of "concentrating really hard to make thoughts go away." That's something else, still useful, but meditation should be thought of as a broadening of focus. Feel free to ask questions in your meditation as long as they are relevant to you. "Who am I?" Is the question that ultimately you're trying to answer when you meditate.

Haha, well Nefandi and I were joking about my particular turn-of-phrase, so I thought I'd make it official. ;-)

Your observations on language and socialising are spot on. The hurdle they produce is that the language implies and triggers a being-a-person pattern (felt boundary and location) but it also directs and narrows your attentional focus.

A useful way around this is to adopt the idea of "letting the world come to you". Rather than focusing in on things with one sense or another - e.g. "concentrating on what someone is saying" - sit back a little and have perception arise by itself. This will feel different to your usual mode: rather than (say) grasping for seeing, and therefore seeing images, you will tend to perceive objects and meaning, without effort. This is great for eyesight improvement; a related article can be read here.

I couldn't find the exact link but I had it saved in a word document (that's how good it is people!)

Daily Releasing Exercise

- Twice a day, 10 minutes, lie down in the constructive rest position.
- Completely let go to gravity. Give up totally, play dead.
- If your body moves or thoughts come up, let them be. Just let them release without interference.
- If you find your attention becomes focused on something, the same: just let go of your attention. Give up, again.
- At the end of the session (don't worry about exact timing), decide to get up, but don't make any movement. Wait until your body moves by itself. This won't happen for a while, but during one session, it will.
- In general, resist the urge to interfere with your body and mind, to push it along. Settle back and let it run at its own pace.

[–]TriumphantGeorge[S] 4 points 10 years ago*

That's the chap!

It's basically the passive version of Overwriting Yourself plus the experience of Just Decide. It's simple and effective. It feels good and it involves nothing more than not-interfering, so no excuses!

permalinkembedsaveparentreportreply

If you're a particularly socially active person, you'll be very hard pressed to maintain the awareness that you are, in fact, the whole experience, and not the body of Joe Somebody talking to Susy Cutofface.

Came here from a link of TG's. Wanted to say that this has some particular pertinence to my everyday life. I have two jobs. One is as a creative writer, the other is a more physically active and social job.

I've found that for a couple of days after doing my "physical" job, it's very hard for me to get back into a fully creative mode of writing. When I'm writing, I tend to zone out - picturing and imagining the alternate reality of the story. This would be homologous to becoming TG's "open holographic conscious space"™. To further use the terminology, I have an intention of what I want to write, and I try to let that "pattern" emerge organically from the creative aether.

I think working the physical job ends up reinforcing my awareness in this current reality, and thus makes it hard for me to step back and try to "see" something else.

Anyway, my two bits and a pence.

It sounds like you have the exact jobs I want to have!

So just to be clear, this process you've described is more difficult after working your "physical" job that involves people? Assuming that is what you meant, I can certainly understand and relate. My advice, not that you need any necessarily, would be to decide on a ritual of some kind (being super ambiguous here) to get in the habit of being detached. This way you can, even after a particularly stressful day of pretending to be a person, come back to the knowledge of yourself as an open, infinite space. Perhaps even more importantly, you can begin to know this ritual is coming, and the simple knowledge that you will be detached later can ease you and make you detached to your circumstances!

[–]Scroon 2 points 10 years ago

You know what? I guess I do have a ritual to get back into things, though I never thought of it as such. I just considered it my way of "getting in the mood". That's great advice though, so thanks!

I'm a little better at sliding back than before, but it's still a pain. Really love the times when I can spend weeks writing straight through.

It sounds like you have the exact jobs I want to have!

My life is funny/unusual though. Many sacrifices/compromises. Although, for me, I don't necessarily see those as bad things.

permalinkembedsaveparentreportreply

[–]Nefandi 1 point 10 years ago

If you're a particularly socially active person, you'll be very hard pressed to maintain the awareness that you are, in fact, the whole experience, and not the body of Joe Somebody talking to Susy Cuteface.

No, you're more than even the whole of experience. You're also all that can in principle be experienced, but isn't yet experienced, the limitless potential.

So even identifying with the manifest aspect in its entirety is still a serious limitation and bondage to the status quo. For example, you may identify yourself with the laws of physics. How will this allow you to bend them? It won't. You need to be transcendent to whatever it is you want power over. Power doesn't speak of just manipulation. It also speaks of solitude, or being free of something's influence. So if you want to be free of the influence of suffering, you need power over the suffering aspect, and for that you need to be transcendent to suffering. All this necessitates one take up the most evolved identity, and identifying with the manifest is not the most evolved identity. It's still a "nose to the grindstone" identity compared to what's possible.

That said, any improvement is to be celebrated. So if you manage to shift from identifying with the body to identifying with the whole of experience, that's still a huge win and a big step forward.

permalinkembedsaveparentreportreply

No, you're more than even the whole of experience. You're also all that can in principle be experienced

Sorry if that wasn't clear, that's what I meant.

I agree. In fact, I did only understand it as me being the manifest for quite some time. Which yes, is a step up, however I see the, well see is a weird word, sense the unmanifest - mainly by my experiences dissolving the manifest and seeing what remains. The simple awareness of one's self and the way in which forms simply manifest, and can be willed one way or another, so it seems. I still feel I have yet to reach the bottom, so to speak, and although I know who I am, I don't know, or don't remember fully what it is like to be without form.

Edit: Instead of "reach the bottom," maybe dissolve all illusion and observe the original state is a better phrasing.

permalinkembedsaveparentreportreply

[–]Nefandi 1 point 10 years ago and although I know who I am, I don't know, or don't remember fully what it is like to be without form

"Without form" is a kind of form in its own right. So to be without form is to change one's relationship to form, rather than eliminate form.

Instead of "reach the bottom," maybe dissolve all illusion and observe the original state is a better phrasing.

I regard all concrete states, states of mind which can be described in terms of specifics, to be illusory. There is no possibility of dissolving illusion to my mind. Only recognize it as such. Once you recognize illusion as illusion, you can play with it.

Can you elaborate on this? I don't quite understand. I'm just imagining a big blob of infinity blobbing outward randomly. This is not how I perceive it to be. I see formlessness as being precisely that. It is like the background that we are in which all this play takes place.

I know, kind of silly to argue with myself over phrasing of something that cannot be phrased in any concrete way.

Form is known in juxtaposition to other form. But so is formlessness. Anything that's known in juxtaposition to form is form.

permalinkembedsaveparentreportreply

[–]3man 2 points 10 years ago

I disagree I think formlessness is not in juxtaposition to form. It doesn't contrast form, it's not black and form is white, for example. It's the space in which black and white exist. I was about to say it has no qualities but that cannot be, its qualities are subtle but you could say it has the quality of being aware. That it is intelligent, and that it is omnipotent.

permalinkembedsaveparentreportreply

[–]Nefandi 4 points 10 years ago

It's hard to say this is some kind of final version of what I use, but here it goes:

Possibilities are limitless. All conceivable and a vast array of currently inconceivable states of experiencing are possible to attain and maintain indefinitely.

Manifestation = current intent - prior intent.

Intent (or will) is always effective, even if there are no currently visible effects.

Intent is structured conceptually. Conceptuality is neither evil nor something one could rid oneself of, but if one fails to understand the nature of conceptuality, there is a possible downfall there.

Everything matters because everything is effective, provided it's still supported by your will in some way. That tiny mundane memory from 30 years ago? It's still affecting who you are today and it even affects the quality of your meditation. If you don't like this, you have to transform your memories, or their meanings. If you leave things at status quo, expect their effects to last indefinitely. Thus, even stupid and mundane events from 10 lives back can be affecting you today. Good news: nothing is lost. Bad news: nothing is lost. Good news: everything can be transformed. Bad news: things don't necessarily transform of themselves, so passive waiting is often a waste of time if transformation is what you want.

And then I always reflect on my value ladder:

Wisdom.

Power.

Compassion.

Imagination.

permalinkembedsavereportreply

[–]TriumphantGeorge[S] 1 point 10 years ago

That's a nice summary, especially the note about memory.

Vincent-XIII

weird (adj.)

c. 1400,

- "having power to control fate", from wierd (n.), from Old English wyrd "fate, chance, fortune; destiny; the Fates," literally "that which comes,"
- from Proto-Germanic wurthiz (cognates: Old Saxon wurd, Old High German wurt "fate," Old Norse urðr "fate, one of the three Norns"),
- from PIE wert- "to turn, to wind," (cognates: German werden, Old English weorðan "to become"),
- from root wer- (3) "to turn, bend" (see versus).

- For sense development from "turning" to "becoming," compare phrase turn into "become."

[22 / 3]The image displays a collection of four distinct logos against a black background.

The logos are arranged in a horizontal row, with each logo occupying its own space.

is written in a cursive font. The second logo features a stylized Celtic knot design, which is composed of three interlocking shapes. The third logo is a stylized representation of the letter "O," enclosed within a circle. The fourth logo on the right is a stylized representation of a feather, which is outlined in white against a black background. The logos are all in white, which stands out against the black background, making them the focal point of the image. There are no texts or additional graphics present in the image. The style of the image is minimalist and graphic, with a focus on the logos themselves.

The image is a digital painting that depicts a scene with a focus on a small, green, owl-like creature with large, round eyes. The owl is standing in a field of tall, yellow grass, which appears to be in a state of growth. The sky above is a light blue with scattered clouds, and there are trees and houses in the background. The painting has a style reminiscent of the post-impressionist movement, characterized by its use of vibrant colors and loose brushstrokes. The overall impression is one of a peaceful, rural landscape.

It was found in the 1557 book Ars Magica Arteficii by J. Cardan. It also appears in the 1655 work Le Triple Vocabulaire Infernal. In these contexts, the symbol is a sigil (a magical sign) used to represent Saturn. Saturn is the planetary ruler of the sign Capricorn. Jimmy Page was born on January 9, making him a Capricorn. By choosing this sigil, Page was essentially using a magical shorthand for his own zodiac identity.

Saturn represents discipline, responsibility, karma, and time. As a musician who was meticulously in control of the band's production and legacy, the disciplined energy of Saturn resonated with Page's personal philosophy and his approach to his craft.

The image displays a mask with a predominantly golden color, featuring a detailed design. The mask has a large, open mouth with a wide grin, and the eyes are large and round. The nose is prominent, and the mouth is adorned with a beard that extends down to the chin. The mask has a decorative pattern on the top, which includes what appears to be leaves and branches. The background is a solid, light blue color, providing a stark contrast to the golden hue of the mask. The image is a photograph with a watermark that reads "www.artifactstore.gr," indicating the source of the image. The style of the image is a clear, well-lit product photograph, intended to showcase the mask for potential buyers.

As Promised heres a thread going into the afterlife. Now this will be a long one, it's ok you don't have to read, just skip freinds or tell me what you want to dream about when you die.

When a person died in ancient Sumer, their body stayed behind, but their spirit called the gidim left the body. The soul did not go to heaven or a place of reward. Instead, it traveled to the underworld, known as Kur.

Kur was a vast, dark realm beneath the earth. It was not fiery or torturous just dim, dusty, and cold. The dead were described as shadows of their former selves. They retained awareness, but they had little strength or joy. They ate dust and drank murky water. Life there was dull and quiet.

The underworld was ruled by the goddess Ereshkigal. The soul was believed to pass through a series of gates before fully entering this realm.

There was no strong moral judgment like heaven versus hell. Nearly everyone ended up in the same place. However, a person's condition in the afterlife depended on whether they received proper burial and ongoing offerings from their family. If the living remembered them and made food or drink offerings, their existence in Kur was more stable. If they were forgotten or left unburied, their spirit could become restless and troubled.

In short:

After death, the Sumerian soul became a shadow in a quiet, underground world continuing to exist, but without the vitality or brightness of earthly life.

The image depicts a scene from a fantastical or dystopian setting, possibly a temple or a grand hall. The central focus is a large group of individuals, all dressed in long, flowing robes, standing in a semi-circular formation. The robes are predominantly white, and the individuals are uniformly dressed, suggesting a uniform or a cult-like organization.

The setting is grand and imposing, with towering stone pillars and arches that reach up into the sky. The architecture is reminiscent of ancient ruins, with the stonework appearing weathered and aged. The ground is covered in large, irregularly shaped stones, and the overall atmosphere is one of solemnity and reverence.

The sky is dark and cloudy, with a soft glow illuminating the scene from the top left corner, casting a dramatic light on the figures. The lighting creates a sense of depth and adds to the overall atmosphere of the image.

There are no discernible texts or specific details that provide context or information about the location or the individuals within the image. The style of the image is realistic with a focus on the composition and the interplay of light and shadow, creating a sense of mystery and intrigue.

The early Hebrew Afterlife pulls from here! (Sheol)

Sheol:

- >The dead go underground.
- >It is dark and silent.
- >The dead are described as sleeping or resting.
- >They do not act, work, or praise God.
- >Everyone goes there (early on, no heaven/hell split).
- >No strong system of feeding the dead through offerings.

Main Similarities:

- >Underground realm
- >Darkness and dust imagery
- >Universal destination
- >No early heaven vs hell separation

Main Difference:

- >Sumerian: The dead remain weak but aware.
- >Early Hebrew: The dead are portrayed more as silent and inactive, "asleep."

The image is a painting that depicts a scene from a traditional Indian dance performance. The central figure is a woman in a traditional Indian costume, seated on the ground with her legs crossed. She is adorned in a white sari, a gold necklace, and a blue and gold sari, and her hair is styled in a flowing manner. She appears to be in a state of deep concentration or meditation.

Surrounding her are several other figures, some of whom are also in traditional Indian attire. They are seated and appear to be engaged in conversation or observing the central figure. The background features a richly decorated tent-like structure with intricate patterns, suggesting a cultural or ceremonial setting.

The painting is executed in a realistic style with attention to detail, capturing the movement and emotion of the dance. The colors are warm and vibrant, with a palette dominated by shades of gold, blue, and brown. The overall composition and the attention to detail in the depiction of the dance suggest a high level of skill and artistry.

In many schools of Hinduism, life itself is compared to a dream (maya = illusion).

Some Upanishadic teachings describe:

- >Waking life = one level of reality
- >Dreaming = another level
- >Deep sleep = another
- >Death = transition of consciousness

Certain Vedantic interpretations suggest that after death, the soul (atman) continues in subtle realms shaped by karma almost like entering another experiential state of mind. Not exactly "a dream," but reality as layers of consciousness.

In Tibetan Buddhism, especially in the Bardo teachings, death leads into a transitional state called the bardo.

The bardo is often described as:

- >Highly dreamlike
- >Visionary
- >Filled with symbolic projections

>Influenced by one's mind and karma

Advanced practitioners train in lucid dreaming specifically to prepare for this.

This is probably the closest major religious framework to “after death feels like a dream realm.”

In broader Buddhism, existence itself is often likened to:

>A bubble

>A mirage

>A dream

Death isn't framed as entering a dream, but consciousness continues according to karmic momentum into another rebirth. Some Mahayana texts explicitly compare post death states to dream imagery.

In certain strands of Gnosticism, the material world is already considered a kind of illusion or dream-state.

Death is seen as awakening from this illusion, not entering another dream, but leaving one.

Within mystical strands of Sufism, there's a famous idea:

Here death is framed as waking up, meaning life itself is the dream.

Across traditions you'll see two main metaphors

>Life is the dream, death is awakening.

>Death is a visionary or dream-like intermediate state.

NDEs

Dreamlike perception

>People report the world around them bending, shifting, or flowing.

>Things may feel fluid, symbolic, or unreal — like a dream.

Heightened awareness

>Despite the surrealism, consciousness often feels clearer than normal waking life.

>People are often fully aware of their own thoughts and surroundings.

Altered time and space

>Time may feel slower, faster, or non-linear.

>Some report seeing multiple perspectives simultaneously.

>Sense of presence or intelligence

>Beings, lights, or entities are often experienced as aware and responsive, sometimes benevolent.

Emotional intensity

>Joy, awe, or peace is common, often more profound than waking emotions.

How it connects to religion and dream-afterlife ideas

>Tibetan Bardo / Buddhist intermediate states: The world can appear fluid, symbolic, and reflective of one's own mind, much like dreamlike NDEs.

>Sufi mysticism: Life is a dream; NDEs can feel like glimpses into the “waking state” of consciousness beyond life.

>Hindu subtle realms: After death, consciousness transitions into more subtle planes experiences that feel vivid but unreal in worldly terms.

So in many ways, NDEs are modern “experiential proof” of the dreamlike death states religions describe, vivid, aware, and shifting, but fundamentally different from our ordinary waking reality

I find that the truth is, as individuals upon death we each enter our own dreams, we create narratives, stories, experiences. It's all very subjective, through psychology, psychedelic experiences, and NDE's/OBE's/Comas we can briefly dip our pinky toes into this territory.

The image depicts a serene countryside scene with a traditional German-style house nestled amidst a lush, green landscape. The house, characterized by its steep gable roof, wooden siding, and a thatched roof, exudes a sense of rustic charm. It is surrounded by a variety of trees and shrubs, creating a natural border. The house is situated on a small hill, with a clear blue sky overhead.

In the foreground, a field of white flowers with blue centers is visible, adding a touch of color to the scene. The flowers appear to be in full bloom, suggesting that the image might have been taken during a time of year when such flowers are in bloom.

The image is rendered in a realistic style, with a focus on the textures and colors of the landscape and the house. The overall composition of the image suggests a peaceful and idyllic countryside setting, possibly from a fantasy or science fiction context. There are no texts or discernible actions in the image. The relative positions of the objects indicate that the house is the central focus, with the field of flowers leading the viewer's eye towards it. The trees and shrubs are scattered around the house, framing it and enhancing its prominence in the scene.

That kind of knowledge is suppressed and lost, the best thing we can surmise is that ancient folk worshipped the stars and archetypal forces. I mean some would argue ancestor/spirit worship, and yeah I could see that, lets put it this way modern or at least semi modern man would see a dancing flame and then they would ascribe a name of a god to it and begin to worship and fuel it where as primal man saw their ancestors in it and prayed to it. That's probably a terrible analogy.

The image is a digital painting that depicts a scene with a focus on a small, green, owl-like creature with large, round eyes. The owl is standing in a field of tall, yellow grass, which appears to be in a state of growth. The sky above is a light blue with scattered clouds, and there are trees and houses in the background. The painting has a style reminiscent of the post-impressionist movement, characterized by its use of vibrant colors and loose brushstrokes. The overall impression is one of a peaceful, rural landscape.

It was found in the 1557 book Ars Magica Arteficii by J. Cardan. It also appears in the 1655 work Le Triple Vocabulaire Infernal. In these contexts, the symbol is a sigil (a magical sign) used to represent Saturn. Saturn is the planetary ruler of the sign Capricorn. Jimmy Page was born on January 9, making him a Capricorn. By choosing this sigil, Page was essentially using a magical shorthand for his own zodiac identity. Saturn represents discipline, responsibility, karma, and time. As a musician who was meticulously in control of the band's production and legacy, the disciplined energy of Saturn resonated with Page's personal philosophy and his approach to his craft.

The nose is prominent, and the mouth is adorned with a beard that extends down to the chin. The mask has a decorative pattern on the top, which includes what appears to be leaves and branches. The background is a solid, light blue color, providing a stark contrast to the golden hue of the mask. The image is a photograph with a watermark that reads "www.artifactstore.gr," indicating the source of the image. Dissociative Identity Disorder: Psych term for possession by demons Anonymous Fri 20 Feb 2026 00:10:49 No.41998148 ViewReplyOriginalReport

There are these youtube channels with these people who have Dissociative Identity Disorder. They openly say they have like 10 different people living inside of them. They switch out from 1 one moment to another.

They call each different personality "alters".

Here are a few examples.

><https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=aVGSdZVLAF4>

><https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=HRmgFtBndIQ>

><https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=atgNVO3BC0Q>

><https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=6j1Zco4EDX4>

You can watch them blanking out, then "switching" sometimes (first video I posted shows this).

They say they lose their consciousness and just "fall asleep" with no memory of what happens when their "alters" take over.

This is what you fucking demons do to people, huh? This the way you take over their bodies? You genuinely just completely push these people's souls aside and then consume their bodies for your own purposes, huh? Fucking bastards.

A lot of you motherfuckers are on this website. A lot of the people on 4chan, particularly /pol/, are undergoing various levels of demonic possession. These are the victims of the demonic possessions.

Interesting stuff thanks anon, I've only watched some of it here and there so far. It's tempting to say "ah this must be fake" but who knows. I have PTSD from childhood stuff and have experienced the going blank phase, really it's just reliving things, classic PTSD, not exactly DID, but it's very familiar. Basically you freeze in place and just stare blankly. It sucks. I got through that rough patch though, it helped for someone to just verify yeah you have PTSD. For some reason that helped me to snap out of dissociations immediately when they start and now I pretty much don't experience it anymore.

As someone with DID i did a lot of demonolatry and can confirm that regular alters aren't demonic and that DID is not inherently demonic. I am willing to accept that some alters might be demonic soul copies, but not universally.

Whats cool as fuck though is the way dissociative barriers isolate emotions into quarantine boxes, causing those emotions to build and distill into something almost pure.

In my heart theres this little box and inside that box is pure rage that has been purified into something almost otherworldly. It's not a demon, it's just me, just a part of me that I can't easily access because I spent my life pushing it down. I have another box for love and empathy, and learning how to open it has helped me thrive at my job at a cancer clinic.

DID is cool stuff. If you don't have it you should make a tulpa and join in anyway.

There is no possession from demons. All of their dissociative identities, or alters as they call them, are all broken fragments of the same individual personlity due to severe trauma.

A person with multiple alters can possibly one day reintegrate all of theses separate alters back towards it's original source of the individual self.

It's like a broken mirror with different pieces of shards laid about. You need to grab those glass shards and fix them back together into the mirror so the mirror can be whole again. Cracked, imperfect, but at least unified as a whole once more yet again.

That's the ideal outcome for people inflicted with DID. But learning to live life with the different alters is fine too. At the end of the day, all alters are broken fragments of the same person.

Yes. I've spoken to other people who have too, they were around hard drug addicts who were satanists. When a spirit occupies a body it looks through the eyes similarly to wearing a mask. This is why they say the eyes are the doorway to the soul and the Bible talks about being careful to not even look at evil things. Just don't do it, not even out of curiosity. There is some mention of this about the discord cults that groom people by desensitizing them to evil imagery in the demon jak thread >>41989732

As Promised heres a thread going into the afterlife. Now this will be a long one, it's ok you don't have to read, just skip freinds or tell me what you want to dream about when you die.

When a person died in ancient Sumer, their body stayed behind, but their spirit called the gidim left the body. The soul did not go to heaven or a place of reward. Instead, it traveled to the underworld, known as Kur.

Kur was a vast, dark realm beneath the earth. It was not fiery or torturous just dim, dusty, and cold. The dead were described as shadows of their former selves. They retained awareness, but they had little strength or joy. They ate dust and drank murky water. Life there was dull and quiet.

The underworld was ruled by the goddess Ereshkigal. The soul was believed to pass through a series of gates before fully entering this realm.

There was no strong moral judgment like heaven versus hell. Nearly everyone ended up in the same place. However, a person's condition in the afterlife depended on whether they received proper burial and ongoing offerings from their family. If the living remembered them and made food or drink offerings, their existence in Kur was more stable. If they were forgotten or left unburied, their spirit could become restless and troubled.

In short:

After death, the Sumerian soul became a shadow in a quiet, underground world continuing to exist, but without the vitality or brightness of earthly life.

The image depicts a scene from a fantastical or dystopian setting, possibly a temple or a grand hall. The central focus is a large group of individuals, all dressed in long, flowing robes, standing in a semi-circular formation. The robes are predominantly white, and the individuals are uniformly dressed, suggesting a uniform or a cult-like organization.

The setting is grand and imposing, with towering stone pillars and arches that reach up into the sky. The architecture is reminiscent of ancient ruins, with the stonework appearing weathered and aged. The ground is covered in large, irregularly shaped stones, and the overall atmosphere is one of solemnity and reverence.

The sky is dark and cloudy, with a soft glow illuminating the scene from the top left corner, casting a dramatic light on the figures. The lighting creates a sense of depth and adds to the overall atmosphere of the image.

There are no discernible texts or specific details that provide context or information about the location or the individuals within the image. The style of the image is realistic with a focus on the composition and the interplay of light and shadow, creating a sense of mystery and intrigue.

The early Hebrew Afterlife pulls from here! (Sheol)

Sheol:

- >The dead go underground.

- >It is dark and silent.

- >The dead are described as sleeping or resting.

- >They do not act, work, or praise God.

- >Everyone goes there (early on, no heaven/hell split).

- >No strong system of feeding the dead through offerings.

Main Similarities:

- >Underground realm

- >Darkness and dust imagery

- >Universal destination

- >No early heaven vs hell separation

Main Difference:

- >Sumerian: The dead remain weak but aware.

- >Early Hebrew: The dead are portrayed more as silent and inactive, "asleep."

The image is a painting that depicts a scene from a traditional Indian dance performance. The central figure is a woman in a traditional Indian costume, seated on the ground with her legs crossed. She is adorned in a white sari, a gold necklace, and a blue and gold sari, and her hair is styled in a flowing manner. She appears to be in a state of deep concentration or meditation.

Surrounding her are several other figures, some of whom are also in traditional Indian attire. They are seated and appear to be engaged in conversation or observing the central figure. The background features a richly decorated tent-like structure with intricate patterns, suggesting a cultural or ceremonial setting.

The painting is executed in a realistic style with attention to detail, capturing the movement and emotion of the dance. The colors are warm and vibrant, with a palette dominated by shades of gold, blue, and brown. The overall composition and the attention to detail in the depiction of the dance suggest a high level of skill and artistry.

In many schools of Hinduism, life itself is compared to a dream (maya = illusion).

Some Upanishadic teachings describe:

- >Waking life = one level of reality

- >Dreaming = another level

>Deep sleep = another

>Death = transition of consciousness

Certain Vedantic interpretations suggest that after death, the soul (atman) continues in subtle realms shaped by karma almost like entering another experiential state of mind. Not exactly “a dream,” but reality as layers of consciousness.

In Tibetan Buddhism, especially in the Bardo teachings, death leads into a transitional state called the bardo.

The bardo is often described as:

>Highly dreamlike

>Visionary

>Filled with symbolic projections

>Influenced by one’s mind and karma

Advanced practitioners train in lucid dreaming specifically to prepare for this.

This is probably the closest major religious framework to “after death feels like a dream realm.”

In broader Buddhism, existence itself is often likened to:

>A bubble

>A mirage

>A dream

Death isn’t framed as entering a dream, but consciousness continues according to karmic momentum into another rebirth. Some Mahayana texts explicitly compare post death states to dream imagery.

In certain strands of Gnosticism, the material world is already considered a kind of illusion or dream-state.

Death is seen as awakening from this illusion, not entering another dream, but leaving one.

Within mystical strands of Sufism, there’s a famous idea:

“People are asleep, and when they die, they awaken.”

Here death is framed as waking up, meaning life itself is the dream.

Across traditions you’ll see two main metaphors

>Life is the dream, death is awakening.

>Death is a visionary or dream-like intermediate state.

NDEs

Dreamlike perception

>People report the world around them bending, shifting, or flowing.

>Things may feel fluid, symbolic, or unreal — like a dream.

Heightened awareness

>Despite the surrealism, consciousness often feels clearer than normal waking life.

>People are often fully aware of their own thoughts and surroundings.

Altered time and space

>Time may feel slower, faster, or non-linear.

>Some report seeing multiple perspectives simultaneously.

>Sense of presence or intelligence

>Beings, lights, or entities are often experienced as aware and responsive, sometimes benevolent.

Emotional intensity

>Joy, awe, or peace is common, often more profound than waking emotions.

How it connects to religion and dream-afterlife ideas

>Tibetan Bardo / Buddhist intermediate states: The world can appear fluid, symbolic, and reflective of one's own mind, much like dreamlike NDEs.

>Sufi mysticism: Life is a dream; NDEs can feel like glimpses into the "waking state" of consciousness beyond life.

>Hindu subtle realms: After death, consciousness transitions into more subtle planes experiences that feel vivid but unreal in worldly terms.

So in many ways, NDEs are modern "experiential proof" of the dreamlike death states religions describe, vivid, aware, and shifting, but fundamentally different from our ordinary waking reality

I find that the truth is, as individuals upon death we each enter our own dreams, we create narratives, stories, experiences. It's all very subjective, through psychology, psychedelic experiences, and NDE's/OBE's/Comas we can briefly dip our pinky toes into this territory.

The image depicts a serene countryside scene with a traditional German-style house nestled amidst a lush, green landscape. The house, characterized by its steep gable roof, wooden siding, and a thatched roof, exudes a sense of rustic charm. It is surrounded by a variety of trees and shrubs, creating a natural border. The house is situated on a small hill, with a clear blue sky overhead.

In the foreground, a field of white flowers with blue centers is visible, adding a touch of color to the scene. The flowers appear to be in full bloom, suggesting that the image might have been taken during a time of year when such flowers are in bloom.

The image is rendered in a realistic style, with a focus on the textures and colors of the landscape and the house. The overall composition of the image suggests a peaceful and idyllic countryside setting, possibly from a fantasy or science fiction context. There are no texts or discernible actions in the image. The relative positions of the objects indicate that the house is the central focus, with the field of flowers leading the viewer's eye towards it. The trees and shrubs are scattered around the house, framing it and enhancing its prominence in the scene.

That kind of knowledge is suppressed and lost, the best thing we can surmise is that ancient folk worshipped the stars and archetypal forces. I mean some would argue ancestor/spirit worship, and yeah I could see that, lets put it this way modern or at least semi modern man would see a dancing flame and then they would ascribe a name of a god to it and begin to worship and fuel it where as primal man saw their ancestors in it and prayed to it. That's probably a terrible analogy.

Dissociative Identity Disorder: Psych term for possession by demons Anonymous Fri 20 Feb 2026 00:10:49 No.41998148 ViewReplyOriginalReport

There are these youtube channels with these people who have Dissociative Identity Disorder. They openly say they have like 10 different people living inside of them. They switch out from 1 one moment to another.

They call each different personality "alters".

Here are a few examples.

><https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=aVGSdZVLAf4>

><https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=HRmgFtBndIQ>

><https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=atgNVO3BC0Q>

><https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=6j1Zco4EDX4>

You can watch them blanking out, then "switching" sometimes (first video I posted shows this).

They say they lose their consciousness and just "fall asleep" with no memory of what happens when their "alters" take over.

This is what you fucking demons do to people, huh? This the way you take over their bodies? You genuinely just completely push these people's souls aside and then consume their bodies for your own purposes, huh? Fucking bastards.

A lot of you motherfuckers are on this website. A lot of the people on 4chan, particularly /pol/, are undergoing various levels of demonic possession. These are the victims of the demonic possessions.

People here should beware that just being on /x/ or /pol/ can attract demons into your life. There are various levels of demonic possession, and if the culture of /pol/ resonates with you then it's very likely you are already under the oppression of these demons. Even if you haven't fully understood this yet.

Interesting stuff thanks anon, I've only watched some of it here and there so far. It's tempting to say "ah this must be fake" but who knows. I have PTSD from childhood stuff and have experienced the going blank phase, really it's just reliving things, classic PTSD, not exactly DID, but it's very familiar. Basically you freeze in place and just stare blankly. It sucks. I got through that rough patch though, it helped for someone to just verify yeah you have PTSD. For some reason that helped me to snap out of dissociations immediately when they start and now I pretty much don't experience it anymore.

As someone with DID i did a lot of demonolatry and can confirm that regular alters aren't demonic and that DID is not inherently demonic. I am willing to accept that some alters might be demonic soul copies, but not universally.

Whats cool as fuck though is the way dissociative barriers isolate emotions into quarantine boxes, causing those emotions to build and distill into something almost pure.

In my heart theres this little box and inside that box is pure rage that has been purified into something almost otherworldly. It's not a demon, it's just me, just a part of me that I can't easily access because I spent my life pushing it down. I have another box for love and empathy, and learning how to open it has helped me thrive at my job at a cancer clinic.

DID is cool stuff. If you don't have it you should make a tulpa and join in anyway.

There is no possession from demons. All of their dissociative identities, or alters as they call them, are all broken fragments of the same individual personlity due to severe trauma.

A person with multiple alters can possibly one day reintegrate all of theses separate alters back towards it's original source of the individual self.

It's like a broken mirror with different pieces of shards laid about. You need to grab those glass shards and fix them back together into the mirror so the mirror can be whole again. Cracked, imperfect, but at least unified as a whole once more yet again.

That's the ideal outcome for people inflicted with DID. But learning to live life with the different alters is fine too. At the end of the day, all alters are broken fragments of the same person.

Yes. I've spoken to other people who have too, they were around hard drug addicts who were satanists. When a spirit occupies a body it looks through the eyes similarly to wearing a mask. This is why they say the eyes are the doorway to the soul and the Bible talks about being careful to not even look at evil things. Just don't do it, not even out of curiosity. There is some mention of this about the discord cults that groom people by desensitizing them to evil imagery in the demon jak thread >>41989732

It's all about opening spiritual doorways to possession. Or creating alters who suppress the trauma of that stuff.

I kind of disagree. Being a whole person is extremely important. If you normalize these kind of disorders people start adopting it as some kind of quirk and then it becomes trendy. See all the self diagnosed autism and "stimmers" who started making people sick on tiktok.

Below the central image, there is a text block with the title "G 7 GENERATIA 16 DECODE CIPHER: Meaning For G In Gen" followed by a list of numbers and letters, presumably representing a code or cipher. The text is in a smaller font size compared to the header and the central image.

At the bottom of the image, there is a bold, red text that reads "YOU WANNA PLAY WITH MY MOTHERFUCKERS??" The text is in a larger font size compared to the rest of the text on the page.

The overall style of the image is informational and seems to be related to a discussion or analysis of a cipher or code, possibly related to the Masonic or Freemasonry movement. The use of the Masonic symbol "G" and the mention of the "Big Fucking Act" in the text suggest a connection to Freemasonry.

The image is a photograph featuring two kittens sitting side by side. The kitten on the left is black with striking blue eyes, while the one on the right is a mix of gray and white with blue eyes. Both kittens have a fluffy coat and appear to be of a young age, possibly kittens.

In the foreground of the image, there is a text overlay in a blue font that reads, "Even kittens cannot save this thread now." The text is centered and appears to be a caption or a statement related to the image. The style of the image is a standard, candid photograph with a focus on the kittens, and the text is placed in a way that it does not distract from the main subjects. The background is a plain, light-colored wall, which does not detract from the kittens or the text.

[1 / 1]The image is a black and white photograph with a text overlay. The text is in English and appears to be a historical or philosophical commentary. The text is divided into two columns, with the left column containing the main text and the right column containing a quote from the text. The quote is in a larger font size than the main text. The text discusses the concept of the Sabbath Zevi, a Jewish figure who was considered the most attractive and the filthiest of the Jewish sects in Russia. It mentions that the Sabbath Zevi were attracted to the most beautiful and the most corrupt women, and that they formed groups of women around a great teacher and sorcerer who could drive them to commit heinous crimes. The text also refers to the concept of the "Eternal Sabbath" and the "Eternal Sabbath Zevi," suggesting a connection between the Sabbath Zevi and the concept of time. The image is a combination of text and a graphic illustration, with the text being the main focus and the graphic illustration providing context to the text.

[22 / 10]The image is a collage of various elements, each with a distinct style and theme. At the center, there is a large, fiery explosion with a bright red beam emanating from it, suggesting a powerful event or action. To the left, there is a depiction of a large, winged creature with a flame-like appearance, possibly a dragon or a mythical creature. On the right, there is a large, humanoid figure with a red and white striped pattern, resembling a deity or a powerful being.

In the background, there are pyramids and a large, ancient Egyptian obelisk, which are common symbols of ancient Egyptian culture. To the left, there is a flag with the American flag design, and to the right, there is a figure with a blue and gold headdress, possibly representing a deity or a powerful figure.

In the foreground, there are several smaller figures, including a man in a blue robe, a man in a white robe, and a man in a brown robe. These figures are depicted in a realistic style, with detailed clothing and expressions.

The overall color palette of the image is warm, with a mix of earthy tones and bright colors, including reds, blues, and yellows. The style of the image is surreal and fantastical, with elements that are not directly related to each other, creating a collage-like effect.

>Rockefellers are actually Vampires Power-serving psyop.

The oligarchy are an invert sex cult (elite gender inversion is what the interwebs have been calling it). It's all fake and gay, everything you see in the media is fake.

Butler PA: fake and gay
Charlie Kirk: fake and gay
Renee Good: fake and gay
Pretti "shooting": fake and gay
JFK? Fake and Gay.
Nukes: super fake and gay

Look at the First "Ladies" and it's obvious, what's less obvious (do to decades of testosterone use) is that all the "men" are inverted as well, but look at their rounded skulls, sloped shoulders, close-set features, and in-line gait. Female skeletons. They are all inverts, just like Melania, Big Mike, Pat Nixon etc ad infinum Inversion is what Carpenter was alluding to in They Live. Freemasonry, like Jews, like Templars etc are deliberate astroturfed red-herrings, game theory it out: why would They have publicly identifiable allegiance? They wouldn't.

But They do exist, and They are an active, malicious cabal, so how does it actually work?

Elite Gender Inversion is not Baal or Baphomet or Saturn or Satan worship (tho They probably worship all of these false gods), it is the means by which They stay biologically distinct and separate from Us and maintain Their information asymmetry through collusion.

They form a distinct separate superorganism that's been parasiting from Us (the human superorganism) for at least 300 years. Information and game theory preclude the oligarchy being a rigid hierarchical structure, it must be an organic system or it would fail to organize effectively, EGI is that organic structure.

Open your eyes, see the theatre and you will no longer fall for Their lies.

The image is a vintage book cover with a sepia tone, featuring a black and white illustration. At the top of the cover, the title "THE VAMPIRE" is prominently displayed in large, bold letters. Below the title, there is a circular portrait of a man with a stern expression, wearing a dark suit and a white cravat. The man's name, "LORD BYRON," is written in a smaller, serif font beneath the portrait.

The central part of the cover features a group of people in a scene that appears to be a battle or confrontation. The figures are drawn in a realistic style, with detailed clothing and expressions. The people are depicted in various poses, some standing, some kneeling, and others in a defensive stance. The central figure is lying on the ground, surrounded by other figures who appear to be in a state of distress or defeat.

At the bottom of the cover, there is a price tag that reads "PRICE ONE PENNY." The text is in a smaller, serif font and is positioned at the bottom of the illustration. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of early 19th-century illustrations, with a focus on the dramatic and intense nature of the scene depicted.

The image is a meme featuring a man with a beard and glasses, wearing a hat and a white robe, holding a baby wrapped in a white cloth. The man is looking at the baby with a concerned expression. The baby is crying. In the background, there are other people, some of whom are wearing traditional Jewish attire, including a tallit (prayer shawl) and a tallis (prayer cloth). The text overlay on the image reads, "DO THEY Suck a CHILD'S DICK AT YOUR CHURCH?" The meme includes a Star of David symbol and a skull and crossbones symbol, which are often associated with anti-Semitism. The overall tone of the meme is satirical and critical, suggesting a critique of religious institutions and their practices.

Pathetic.

We can bolster the EGI hypothesis by examining the rare condition CAIS (complete androgen insensitivity syndrome) which produces XY individuals with "phenotypically normal" female features, however, with distinctly male skeletons, CAIS women display the same male markers as female-presenting inverts: wide-set eyes, square shoulders, long necks, large hands etc, proving hormones don't dominate skeletal sexual dimorphism.

Vampire lore runs contrary to known qualities of reality. They're said to be undead, which we have never observed and have no conceivable mechanism to cause. When things die, they cease functions and decompose, rapidly losing the ability to act even if they were to somehow be reanimated - there is only so much you can do without a heartbeat, and thus blood flow. Speaking of blood, even if they have restored metabolic function, the math does not add up that a human can survive only just blood. Then there's the superhuman powers, exhibited by a reanimated corpse, the immortality, the garlic and crosses, stakes, the sunlight incineration...

I don't know for sure, but I have some ideas for you to consider.

Let's assume such events go against 'normal' Vampire nature, and are therefore rare, what evidence would remain? Word of mouth? Of what? Mass killings? Tyrannical warlords? History is rife with them. Leaders behaving strangely? Hardly unheard of. I'm asking what specific evidence you believe would be available hundreds or thousands of years later that a normal historian wouldn't explain away as imaginings or metaphor or ancient superstition.

You should also consider that such behavior may displease other Vampires, who may in turn take steps to curb it outright, or cover it up afterwards.

And finally, you should consider that if Vampires exist, it may be the case that there are other powers at work either in opposition or at least competition with them.

Yes it's true that I said the worst thing that could happen is a group of people with pointy sticks, but that was in reference to normal humans.

>>41967062

Sure, much of the lore is inaccurate.

>Speaking of blood, even if they have restored metabolic function, the math does not add up that a human can survive only just blood.

Agreed, this is real head-scratcher.

>Then there's the superhuman powers
An eagle has 'superhuman' vision. A gorilla has 'superhuman' strength. Hell even a house-cat has 'superhuman' reflexes. Humans are physically unimpressive.

>the immortality
Lobsters are immortal.

Obviously not all the lore can be accurate, it's contradictory from different sources.

>and get standard vampire "I stay away from groups or people" personality?
That's not what I said, I said they don't often seek the attention of large groups of people.

I'm not sure if any changes of personality are due to physical changes in the brain of the Vampire, or more just a consequence of the Vampiric experience.

It would be completely inaccurate to say there is a 'standard' Vampire personality, but it's true that many exhibit a few similar traits. In the same way you may expect many women or men from the same area and cultural background to also have a few quirks in common.

The creature is standing upright on two legs, with its head turned to the left, as if observing something or someone. The creature's skin is a vibrant green, and it has a serpentine pattern on its

In the background, there are two figures that seem to be humanoid, wearing what appears to be armor and cloaks. They are standing close to each other, facing the creature, and their expressions are not clearly visible due to the pixelated nature of the image. The background is dark, which contrasts with the bright green of the creature and the purple and blue hues of the armor and cloaks.

>But they would still be them.

That's true but a huge part of personality differences in women and men is due to hormones. For example, many males report that they suddenly can cry a lot easier and more after getting estrogen. Women report to be more aggressive and sexual after testosterone. So I'm guessing vampire women don't have ovulation, menstruation and all that. This would influence the level of hormones in their bodies. If vampires have "similar" hormone levels compared to humans, that's why I asked if they have less gender differences.

The image is a close-up photograph of an elderly woman with white hair. She is wearing a white blouse and a pearl necklace. Her expression is neutral, and she is looking off to the side with a slight smile. The background is blurred, but it appears to be an indoor setting with a flag and a flagpole. The woman's attire and the setting suggest that she might be at a formal event or ceremony. There are no visible texts or distinctive markings in the image. The style of the photograph is realistic, with a focus on the subject and a shallow depth of field, which blurs the background while keeping the woman in sharp focus.

The image is a screenshot from a video game, depicting a scene with two characters standing in front of a stone building. The character on the left is wearing a green robe and has a staff in hand, while the character on the right is dressed in a red robe and also has a staff. Both characters appear to be engaged in a conversation, as indicated by the text overlay in the image. The text reads: "This tombstone has been vandalised; its original wording replaced by 'Vampires are evil.'" The characters are standing on a grassy area with a stone wall and a tree in the background. The overall style of the image is that of a video game, with a focus on the characters and their dialogue.

The image depicts a section of a wall painting that appears to be from ancient Egypt, judging by the style and the figures depicted. The scene is set in a desert landscape, with a group of figures riding on horseback. The horses are adorned with decorative patterns, and the riders are equipped with long spears and shields. The figures are dressed in elaborate clothing, with some wearing headdresses and others wearing belts. The background of the painting is a rough, textured wall, with a faded, yellowish hue. The overall style of the painting is reminiscent of ancient Egyptian art, characterized by its use of naturalistic figures and a focus on the natural world. There are no discernible texts or inscriptions within the image.
